EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined products of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

I. DEFINITIONS, NATURE, AND DISTINCTIONS

1. Definitions

A pledge is a bailment or transfer of personal property as security for a debt or other obligation; a bailment or delivery of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept until the debtor's obligation is discharged. "Pledge" has substantially the same meaning as "pawn."

The word "pledge" has a legal and well defined interpretation.<sup>1</sup> Broadly speaking, it is a transfer, bailment, or deposit of personal property<sup>2</sup> as a security for a debt or other obligation.<sup>3</sup> More specifically, it is a bailment or delivery of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept until the debtor's obligation is discharged;<sup>4</sup> a deposit of personal effects, not to be taken back, but on payment of a certain sum, by express stipulation to be a lien on it;<sup>5</sup> a deposit of corporeal personal property as security with express or implied power of sale on default.<sup>6</sup> As discussed infra § 11, every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only is generally deemed to be a pledge.

A "pledge" has been defined as a lien created by the owner of personal property by the mere delivery of it to another, on an express or implied understanding that it shall be retained as security for an existing or future debt.<sup>7</sup>

The word "pledge" is also sometimes used to describe the article or articles of personal property thus delivered by one person to another as security for the debt or obligation,<sup>8</sup> but this is using the word in a colloquial, rather than a technical, sense.<sup>9</sup>

Pawn. The word "pawn" has the same legal signification as "pledge"<sup>10</sup> and is often referred to as being synonymous with the latter word.<sup>11</sup> In this respect "a pawn" may be defined as a mere collateral security for the payment of a debt,<sup>12</sup> a species of bailment which arises when personal property is deposited with another as security for some debt or engagement,<sup>13</sup> and which is made for the mutual benefit of the parties.<sup>14</sup> In common usage, however, the word "pawn" is applied to a pledge of chattels as distinguished from that of choses in action,<sup>15</sup> and in a more limited sense has been employed to mean a deposit of personal property made to a pawnbroker as security for a loan.<sup>16</sup>

Pledgor and pledgee. The person who delivers the property as security is called the "pledgor"<sup>17</sup> and the person who receives it to hold in accordance with the contract the "pledgee."<sup>18</sup>

Pledgeholder. Where the pledgor and pledgee select a third person to hold the property pledged, for the purposes of the pledge, he is called the "pledgeholder."<sup>19</sup>

Other terms. Various terms have been said to be synonymous with "pledge," such as "security,"<sup>20</sup> "assurance,"<sup>21</sup> and, under some conditions, "forfeit."<sup>22</sup> "Collateral security" is sometimes used to denote a "pledge,"<sup>23</sup> more particularly, a "pledge" of a chose in action or incorporeal property as distinguished from a "pledge" of corporeal personal property.<sup>24</sup>

In the Roman and under the civil law, the term "pignus" is substantially similar in import to "pledge."<sup>25</sup>

§ 2. Nature in General

A pledge is a contract for the delivery of personalty to be retained by the pledgee as security for the performance of some obligation due from the pledgor, title remaining in him and possession only passing to the pledgee.

It has been broadly stated that a pledge is a contract for delivery of personalty to be retained by the pledgee as security for the performance of some obligation due from the pledgor, legal title remaining in the pledgor and possession only passing to the pledgee, who has a special property in the thing pledged until the obligation secured is satisfied.<sup>26</sup> The transaction is a kind of bailment and security;<sup>27</sup> it remains a pledge until its status has been changed by foreclosure or further contract of the parties.<sup>28</sup> A pledge creates a contract relationship,<sup>29</sup> its primary purpose or basis being to put it in the power of the pledgee to reimburse himself for the money advanced when it becomes due and remains due and unpaid;<sup>30</sup> the contract carries with it an implication that the security shall be made effectual to discharge the obligation.<sup>31</sup> The pledge is generally regarded as collateral to the principal obligation.<sup>32</sup>

Property as surety. Property pledged by the owner to answer for the debt or default of another occupies the position of a surety.<sup>33</sup>

Relationship between pledgor and pledgee. Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>34</sup> it has been held that the relationship between pledgor and pledgee is not confidential<sup>35</sup> and does not preclude the parties thereto from dealing with each other with respect to the property held as collateral.<sup>36</sup> The pledgor and pledgee have been held to stand to each other in the relationship of bailor and bailee.<sup>37</sup>

§ 3. Distinguished from Other Transactions

A pledge is distinguishable from a number of somewhat similar transactions; and whether in a given case a transaction constitutes a pledge or another transaction depends on the intention of the parties as ascertained from the contract.

Whether in a given case the transaction constitutes a pledge or another transaction depends on the intention of the parties as ascertained from the contract<sup>38</sup> by application of the general rules of construction,<sup>39</sup> and is generally a question of fact to be determined as such from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>40</sup> A loan of money on the security of articles deposited with the lender is a pledge, although a chattel mortgage on them is given in addition.<sup>41</sup>

A pledge is similar to, but differs in certain material respects from, a number of other transactions, such as an assignment in general, as discussed in Assignments § 2, an assignment for the benefit of creditors, as discussed in Assignments for Benefit of Creditors § 4 i, a chattel mortgage, as discussed in Chattel Mortgages § 4, a lien, as discussed in Liens § 1 a, a trust receipt, as discussed in Chattel Mortgages § 9, a wager, as discussed in Gaming § 1, or, as discussed infra § 4, a sale.

"Antichresis" is a term of the civil law meaning a delivery of real property as security for a debt and differs from a pledge in that the security consists of real property or immovables.<sup>42</sup>

Assignment in trust. A pledge has sometimes been spoken of as in the nature of a trust;<sup>43</sup> but strictly it has not the legal characteristics of a trust<sup>44</sup> and particularly is distinguishable therefrom in that in the case of an assignment in trust the title to the property passes, whereas in the case of a pledge it does not.<sup>45</sup>

Conditional payment. The transfer of the note of a third person by a debtor to his creditor on agreement that, if the note is paid at maturity, the debt is to be satisfied, is a conditional payment, and not a pledge.<sup>46</sup>

Hypothecation. "Hypothecation" is distinguishable from "pledge" or "pawn" in respect of possession; in the case of a pledge the thing pledged passes into the possession of the pledgee, whereas in the case of hypothecation it remains in the possession of the owner.<sup>47</sup>

Privilege. It has been said that a pledge is a privilege, with the right of retention of the property pledged,<sup>48</sup> but a "privilege" and a "pledge" are distinguishable, in that a privilege is a right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor and enables him to be preferred over other creditors, whereas a pledge is a contract by which a debtor gives something to his creditor as a security for his debt.<sup>49</sup>

Transfer. A "pledge" cannot be regarded as synonymous with a "transfer" of property in the sense in which the latter term is ordinarily used.<sup>50</sup>

a. In General

The distinction between a pledge and a sale is that in case of a pledge possession alone, and not title, passes to the pledgee, whereas in the case of a sale title passes to the vendee.

A pledge differs from a sale in that, in case of a pledge, only the possession of the property passes and not the title thereto, the pledgee acquiring only a special property in the thing pledged, as discussed infra § 23, whereas in case of a sale the title passes to the vendee.<sup>51</sup> In case of a sale, transfer of possession may or may not be made,<sup>52</sup> whereas transfer of possession is indispensable to a pledge and loss thereof destroys the pledge.<sup>53</sup> Where property is delivered with a right reserved by the grantor to repurchase at a stipulated price within a given time, whether the transaction constitutes a sale or a pledge must be determined by the peculiar circumstances of the case.<sup>54</sup>

Pledge and not sale. A transaction is a pledge, and not a sale, where, although in some respects similar to a sale, it constitutes a delivery of personal property merely as security for a debt or other obligation,<sup>55</sup> as where property is assigned to secure an amount less than its acknowledged value,<sup>56</sup> or there is no agreement to receive the property in satisfaction of the debt,<sup>57</sup> or where the transfer of the property is collateral to the execution of a note<sup>58</sup> or the payment of a draft.<sup>59</sup>

Sale and not pledge. If personal property is delivered by a debtor to his creditor in payment of the debt, the transaction is not a pledge, but has the effect of a sale;<sup>60</sup> and this is also true if goods are delivered by the debtor to the creditor to be sold, and the proceeds applied on the debt with a return of the surplus.<sup>61</sup> A transaction which on its face constitutes a sale will not be converted into a pledge by a mere agreement to repurchase or resell<sup>62</sup> or redeem.<sup>63</sup> Even though the transaction is in the form of a pledge, it may be converted into a sale by a subsequent agreement that the pledgee shall take the property in extinguishment of the debt.<sup>64</sup>

b. Conditional Sale

The distinction between a pledge and a conditional sale is that in the former legal title remains in the pledgor, whereas in the latter title passes to the vendee, subject to being divested.

The important distinction between a "pledge" and a "conditional sale" is that in a contract of pledge the legal title remains in the pledgor, while in a "conditional sale," in the strict sense of the term, title passes to the vendee, subject to being divested, as by a reservation to the vendor, of a right to repurchase the property at a fixed price and specified time;<sup>65</sup> and a transaction in form a conditional sale will be construed as a pledge where it appears that it was intended as a security only;<sup>66</sup> this rule applies although the object in adopting the form of a conditional sale was to avoid the usury laws.<sup>67</sup>

The intention of the parties at the inception of the contract determines whether it is a pledge or a conditional sale, and its character is not changed by lapse of time.<sup>68</sup> Generally speaking, where a doubt exists as to whether a transaction is a conditional sale or a pledge, it will be deemed a pledge.<sup>69</sup> It is sometimes held that a contract by which property is transferred by a debtor to his creditor as a security for his debt, with a provision that, if the debt is not paid at maturity, the creditor shall become the owner of the property, is enforced as a conditional sale;<sup>70</sup> but such a contract is more generally regarded as a pledge,<sup>71</sup> and, as discussed infra § 52, the provision that, on the debtor's default, the title shall become absolute in the pledgee is generally held void.

II. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY

§ 5. In General

The necessary elements of a pledge are a pledgor and a pledgee, a debt or obligation, and a contract of pledge.

The necessary elements of a pledge are: A pledgor and a pledgee, a debt or obligation, and a contract of pledge.<sup>72</sup> In order to constitute a contract one of pledge the possession of the pledged property must pass from the pledgor to the pledgee or to someone for him, the legal title to the pledged property must remain in the pledgor, the pledgee must have a lien on the property for the payment of a debt or performance of an obligation due him by the pledgor or some other person, and

there must be a right of redemption in the pledgor.<sup>73</sup> A pledge involves a transfer merely of the possession of personal property, and not of the title.<sup>74</sup> The contract may be made on such terms and conditions as the parties agree on.<sup>75</sup>

Validity in general. A grant of an unfettered dominion over pledged property to the pledgor invalidates the pledge as to creditors because of the inherent repugnancy between the pledge and the reserved power.<sup>76</sup> Not every grant of control will invalidate the pledge,<sup>77</sup> and the mere fact that the pledgor is given the right to collect sums receivable from the collateral does not invalidate the pledge.<sup>78</sup>

§ 6. What Law Governs

The validity of a contract of pledge and the rights of the parties thereunder are determined, as a general rule, by the law of the state where the contract is made and is to be performed.

The validity of a contract of pledge and the rights of the parties thereunder are determined, as a general rule, by the law of the state where the contract is made and is to be performed,<sup>79</sup> especially where the contract expressly so provides.<sup>80</sup> Where, however, it is evident from the facts and circumstances that it is the intention of the parties that the contract, although made in one state, shall be performed in another state, where the pledged property is situated, the law of the latter state will govern,<sup>81</sup> even though the principal contract to which the pledge is collateral is to be performed in another state and is governed by the laws of that state.<sup>82</sup> When a pledge of goods within the jurisdiction of a particular state is made elsewhere, the state within whose jurisdiction the property is situated may apply its domestic law.<sup>83</sup>

Whether or not a pledgee has converted proceeds obtained from the collateral security is determined by the law of the state in which the pledgee held the collateral and received the proceeds.<sup>84</sup>

§ 8. — As Dependent on Title or Interest of Pledgor

A pledge may be made only by one who is the owner of the property or interest pledged, or by one who has authority and consent from the owner to use it for the purposes of a pledge. An unauthorized pledge may become valid on approval or ratification by the owner.

A debtor may pledge any interest which he owns in property;<sup>87</sup> but cannot pledge any further right or interest than he himself has.<sup>88</sup> Therefore, as a general rule, a pledge may be made only by one who is the owner of the property or interest pledged,<sup>89</sup> or by one who, although he has no interest in the property, has authority and consent from the owner to use it for the purposes of a pledge.<sup>90</sup> In the absence of authority and consent by the owner, or of subsequent approval or ratification by him, a pledge by one who has no interest in the property is void as against the real owner,<sup>91</sup> and the owner may follow and reclaim the property no matter in whose possession it may be found.<sup>92</sup> Mere possession of property, with the consent of the owner, and apparent title, is insufficient to authorize the possessor to pledge the property,<sup>93</sup> unless such apparent ownership is permitted by the

Property subject to a lien may be pledged to another,<sup>96</sup> but in such a case the pledgee takes the pledge subject to the prior lien, as discussed infra § 25.

Approval or ratification of unauthorized pledge. A pledge of property, without the owner's authority and consent, may become valid and binding when the owner, with full knowledge of the unauthorized pledge, approves it, where it was made by a third person,<sup>97</sup> or ratifies it, where it was made by his agent on his behalf or for his benefit.<sup>98</sup>

§ 9. Property Subject to Pledge

- a. In general
- b. Property not in existence
- c. Chose in action
- d. Personal obligation of principal debtor

a. In General

Personal property only may be made the subject of a pledge. As a general rule every kind of personal property may be pledged, provided it is capable of delivery and there is no statutory prohibition.

Personal property only may be made the subject of a pledge.<sup>99</sup> As a general rule, personal property of every kind may be pledged,<sup>1</sup> provided it is capable of delivery<sup>2</sup> and there is no statutory prohibition.<sup>3</sup> The value of the property, as being more than the debt secured, is immaterial.<sup>4</sup> Although money may be the subject of a pledge,<sup>5</sup> a deposit of a sum of money as security for the performance of a contract has been held not to be a pledge, but to create the relationship of debtor and creditor.<sup>6</sup>

As a general rule, property which is not in existence at the time cannot be the subject of a pledge.

As a general rule, property which is not in existence at the time cannot be the subject of a pledge;<sup>7</sup> but an agreement as to such property will be construed as a contract for a pledge,<sup>8</sup> or as an equitable pledge, as considered infra § 14, and a lien in favor of the creditor will attach when the property comes into existence.<sup>9</sup> Thus it has been held that a pledge of uncut timber to be delivered after it is cut is valid and takes effect as soon as the timber is cut and delivered,<sup>10</sup> but that, until such delivery, there is no pledge as against third persons.<sup>11</sup>

c. Chose in Action

Unless prohibited by statute, a pledge may be made of a chose in action.

Unless prohibited by statute, a pledge may be made of a chose in action,<sup>12</sup> such as an accepted bill of exchange;<sup>13</sup> a promissory note;<sup>14</sup> and, like-

As a general rule, one personal obligation of a debtor cannot become a pledge or collateral security for another obligation of the same debtor.

As a general rule, one personal obligation of a debtor cannot become a pledge or collateral security for another obligation of the same debtor.<sup>25</sup> A debtor may pledge his own mortgage bond as collateral security for a note executed by him,<sup>26</sup> and, where his personal obligation is secured by a lien on property, both may be treated as collateral

so far as is necessary to give the creditor the benefit of the lien or obligation.<sup>27</sup>

- a. In general
- b. Illegal or invalid debt or obligation

a. In General

A pledge may be made not only to secure debts and obligations created at the time of delivery, but also to secure preexisting debts, future loans and advances, and contingent liabilities.

A pledge may be made not only to secure debts and obligations created at the time of delivery,<sup>28</sup> but also to secure preexisting debts,<sup>29</sup> future loans and advances,<sup>30</sup> and contingent liabilities.<sup>31</sup> A contract making its collateral subject to the payment of other indebtedness, besides the one for which the collateral is particularly pledged, is a valid agreement,<sup>32</sup> and the right to sell the collateral for the nonpayment of the other indebtedness is equally as valid.<sup>33</sup>

b. Illegal or Invalid Debt or Obligation

As a general rule, the invalidity of the principal debt or obligation destroys the claim of the creditor on collaterals held for its security.

As a general rule, the invalidity of the principal debt or obligation destroys the claim of the creditor on collaterals held for its security,<sup>34</sup> as where it is given as security for a gambling debt or obligation.<sup>35</sup> A pledge voluntarily made to secure an illegal demand may not be reclaimed by the pledgor without payment of the demand,<sup>36</sup> and the fact that a note given for a valid debt is illegal does not render the whole transaction invalid, and property pledged as security for such note may be held as security for the principal debt.<sup>37</sup>

Failure of consideration. Invalidity of the principal obligation for want of consideration necessarily renders void a transfer of collaterals as security for such obligation.<sup>38</sup> Where the consideration for the contract consists of several mutual covenants, and the contract is not an entire one, inability to perform one of the covenants does not constitute such a failure of consideration as to render the whole contract void.<sup>39</sup>

§ 11. Necessity, Form, and Requisites of Contract

- a. In general
- b. Contents of written contract

a. In General

A pledge of personal property requires a contract expressing the intention of the parties that the property is to be held as security. No particular formality is necessary and a contract may be implied from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.

In order to constitute a pledge of personal property there must be a contract whereby the property is to be held as security.<sup>40</sup> Although the contract must be specific and definite,<sup>41</sup> as a general rule it is not essential that the contract shall be expressed in any formal manner,<sup>42</sup> even though a statute requires a pledge to be in writing to be valid against third persons;<sup>43</sup> and, where it appears that the minds of the parties have met, it may be implied from the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>44</sup> However, whether express or implied, the intention of the parties that the property is to be held as a pledge must clearly appear;<sup>45</sup> and accordingly every contract, express or implied, by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only is generally deemed to be a pledge.<sup>46</sup> The legislature may change a statute

"Pledge" defined see supra § 1.

Under express statutory provision in some jurisdictions, the term which relates to the execution of a pledge provided no constitutional inhibition is violated.<sup>47</sup>

Insufficiency. A contract of pledge is not constituted by a mere loose understanding<sup>48</sup> or statement,<sup>49</sup> or by statements by one party to which the other does not assent.<sup>50</sup>

Use of word "pledge" in an instrument does not of itself settle the character of the transaction as a pledge;<sup>51</sup> but where the word "pledge" is used, and the nature of the transaction is in conformity with the character of a pledge, the word is accurately used, and must control, both as expressive of the intent of the parties and of the legal effect of their agreement.<sup>52</sup>

Subsequent stipulation validating imperfect pledge. Where an attempt has been made to pledge property, the parties may, by a subsequent stipulation or ratification of the original contract, make a valid pledge although the original pledge was imperfect.<sup>53</sup>

b. Contents of Written Contract

In a written pledge, the amount of the debt or liability secured should be designated with reasonable certainty and the property pledged must be sufficiently described to identify it.

Where the contract of pledge is in writing, it should designate with reasonable certainty the amount of the debt or liability secured;<sup>54</sup> but it need not stipulate that the pledgee shall have a lien.<sup>55</sup>

Description of property. The particular property pledged need not be fully described;<sup>56</sup> but it must be sufficiently described to identify it,<sup>57</sup> and this is especially true where the property is not delivered to the pledgee, and the pledgor is allowed to keep possession as the pledgee's agent.<sup>58</sup> A failure to describe the property, or an incomplete description thereof, may be cured by a delivery of the property to the pledgee.<sup>59</sup>

Mentioning in note. It is not essential to the validity of a pledge that it be specifically mentioned in the note secured thereby,<sup>60</sup> and a lien can be foreclosed on property which the evidence shows was pledged as collateral security for the note, although not mentioned in the note.<sup>61</sup>

§ 12. — Written or Oral

Unless required by statute, as a general rule it is not essential to the validity of a contract of pledge that it be in writing.

Unless required by statute, as a general rule it is not essential to the validity of a contract of pledge that it be in writing,<sup>62</sup> and statutes requiring a writing for the validity of sales or mortgages do not apply to pledges.<sup>63</sup> Under some statutes a pledge must be in writing in order to be effective with respect to third persons,<sup>64</sup> but such statutes do not apply so as to affect the validity of the pledge between the parties to the transaction.<sup>65</sup> It has been held that a pledge of a chose in action not capable of manual delivery cannot be made without a written transfer of title,<sup>66</sup> which performs the office of delivery of possession on a pledge of corporeal property;<sup>67</sup> but where the debt is evidenced by a writing, such as a bond and mortgage, a mere delivery thereof to the pledgee without any writing is sufficient, at least in a court of equity.<sup>68</sup> Where collateral notes were pledged under a written agreement as security for a note, it was held that the mere fact that the pledgee did not indorse the collateral notes was of no consequence.<sup>69</sup>

"pledge" includes every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only.—Levison v. Boas, 88 P. 825 150 Cal. 185, 190, 12 L.R.A., N.S., 575, 11 Ann.Cas. 661—49 C.J. p 896 note 9.

§ 13. — Consideration

b. Preexisting indebtedness

a. In General

A contract of pledge must be supported by a valid consideration, and general rules apply as to the sufficiency of the consideration.

As in the case of contracts generally, a contract of pledge must be supported by a valid consideration;<sup>70</sup> and a pledge of property for the debt of another is presumed to have been made for a sufficient consideration.<sup>71</sup>

Sufficiency of consideration. The general rules, discussed in Contracts §§ 74-126, apply as to the sufficiency of the consideration.<sup>72</sup> It has been held that such consideration may consist of a loan of money,<sup>73</sup> a discount of notes,<sup>74</sup> an obligation assumed by the pledgee at the time of the pledge,<sup>75</sup> a surrender or exchange of property already held as collateral,<sup>76</sup> or an extension of time for the payment of a debt<sup>77</sup> unless the extension is too indefinite.<sup>78</sup>

b. Preexisting Indebtedness

As a general rule, a preexisting debt or liability, if still subsisting, is a sufficient consideration for a contract of pledge.

Although there is some authority that a preexisting debt will not support a pledge of collateral security,<sup>79</sup> as a general rule a preexisting debt or liability, if still subsisting, is a sufficient consideration for a contract of pledge<sup>80</sup> without any new consideration,<sup>81</sup> even though the pledgor's liability is only a contingent liability.<sup>82</sup> Where the pledgor is a stranger to the debt and there is no other consideration, the pledge is void for want of consideration;<sup>83</sup> and under a statutory provision that the real owner cannot defeat a pledge of property which has been transferred to an apparent owner for the purpose of pledge, and which he pledges in good faith for value, a pledge by an apparent owner for a past indebtedness is not for value so as to be good against the real owner.<sup>84</sup>

Mere executory contract for a pledge, as security for an existing debt, where there has been no delivery, is void without a new consideration.<sup>85</sup>

§ 14. — Equitable Pledge

A contract for a pledge which does not constitute a valid pledge because of the lack of some requisite creates an equitable pledge which is generally enforceable between the parties and purchasers with notice.

A contract for a pledge which does not constitute a valid pledge because of the lack of some requisite,<sup>86</sup> such as the nonexistence of the property to be pledged at the time thereof<sup>87</sup> or want of delivery of the property,<sup>88</sup> creates an equitable lien or pledge, which a court of equity will enforce between the parties<sup>89</sup> and purchasers with notice,<sup>90</sup> but not as against subsequent bona fide purchasers or pledgees for value.<sup>91</sup> There is authority both that it will<sup>92</sup> and will not<sup>93</sup> be enforced as against the then general creditors of the pledgor; in any event it will not be enforced as against creditors who have a superior claim on the property.<sup>94</sup> In order to apply the doctrine of an equitable pledge there must be a contract from which it sufficiently appears that the particular property was designed by the debtor to be subjected to the payment of the debt;<sup>95</sup> and the property must come into existence and into the possession of the pledgee in order to give him any title thereto.<sup>96</sup>

§ 15. — Absolute Transfer as Pledge

A bill of sale or other transfer of property absolute in form, such as an assignment of a mortgage, will be construed as a pledge where it appears that the instrument was intended merely as security.

A bill of sale<sup>97</sup> or other transfer of property absolute in form<sup>98</sup> will be construed as a pledge where it appears, either from the instrument itself<sup>99</sup> or from other evidence<sup>1</sup> that it was intended as a security only. It is not necessary, to the application of this rule, that an express promise on the part of the transferor to pay the debt shall appear<sup>2</sup> or that fraud be shown.<sup>3</sup> Where a creditor releases a surety on a deposit of paper security, but the debt continues in fact, the creditor does not become the owner of such security but holds it as a pledgee.<sup>4</sup> It has been held that an absolute sale for a cash price acknowledged to have been received cannot be construed as a pledge.<sup>5</sup>

Where the original transaction constitutes a pledge, no act on the part of the pledgee alone can convert it into an outright assignment.<sup>6</sup>

Assignment of mortgage as collateral. Where a mortgagee assigns a mortgage as security for a debt, the transaction constitutes a pledge.<sup>7</sup> Whether an assignment of a mortgage is in legal effect a pledge is determined by the substance of the contract and the intention of the parties.<sup>8</sup>

Validity of notes

One who alleges that property in his possession was pledged to secure the payment of certain notes held by him has the burden of proving the validity of the notes.—De Silver v. Pennsylvania Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, 20 A.2d 761, 342 Pa. 320.

Repledge

Where the pledgee claims that a note which he did not return after it had been paid was repledged to secure a subsequent loan, he has the burden of showing that the pledgor consented to the repledge.—Poliato v. Ferraro, La.App., 135 So. 477.

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

There is a presumption that property deposited by a debtor with his creditor was intended as collateral security for the debt. Where a transfer of property is absolute on its face the burden of proving that it was intended as a mere pledge is on the one who claims it to be such.

Where a debtor deposits property with his creditor, it is presumed, in the absence of any showing as to the purpose with which the deposit was made or received, that it was intended as collateral security for the debt.<sup>9</sup> In case of doubt whether a transaction by which personal property is given as security is a pledge, or is a chattel mortgage,<sup>10</sup> a sale,<sup>11</sup> a conditional sale,<sup>12</sup> or an absolute assignment,<sup>13</sup> the law favors the conclusion that it is a pledge; but where a transfer of property is absolute on its face the burden is on one who asserts that it was intended as a mere pledge to establish that fact by clear and satisfactory proof.<sup>14</sup> Where it is admitted that the property is owned by another, one who claims that it is subject to a pledge in his favor has the burden of proving that fact.<sup>15</sup>

b. Admissibility

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a transfer, absolute on its face, was in reality intended only as a pledge.

In accordance with the general rule that parol evidence is admissible where it is offered, not for the purpose of varying the terms of a written contract, but for the purpose of explaining and showing the real nature of the transaction, as considered in Evidence § 1015, parol evidence is admissible to show that an assignment or transfer of personal property, absolute on its face, was in reality intended only as a pledge,<sup>16</sup> and such fact may also be shown by written evidence.<sup>17</sup> For example, where a note or other negotiable instrument is indorsed by the holder to another, parol evidence is admissible to show that the indorsement was intended to transfer the paper simply as collateral security, and not absolutely.<sup>18</sup> Evidence of any acts of the parties relevant to the issue is properly admitted,<sup>19</sup> and evidence of irrelevant acts is properly excluded.<sup>20</sup>

Where the instrument making the transfer amounts to a complete contract or agreement between the parties, parol evidence cannot be introduced to vary or contradict the terms of the written contract, as considered in Evidence § 900.

c. Weight and Sufficiency

General rules apply with respect to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to whether or not a particular transaction constitutes a pledge. In the case of a transfer, absolute on its face, it cannot be construed as a pledge unless the evidence is clear and convincing.

General rules apply with respect to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence as to the character of a particular transaction, whether it constitutes a pledge or other form of contract,<sup>21</sup> and the terms and conditions thereof.<sup>22</sup> Thus evidence sufficient to show whether an ambiguous transaction constitutes a pledge may consist of the writings, if any, accompanying the transaction,<sup>23</sup> the oral statements of the parties made at the time<sup>24</sup> or afterward,<sup>25</sup> and of any collateral circumstances tending to show the intentions of the parties.<sup>26</sup> The uncontradicted evidence of one of the parties that the property was transferred as collateral may be sufficient to prove a pledge.<sup>27</sup> The fact that no note was given and no rate of interest agreed on does not conclusively establish that the transaction was not a pledge.<sup>28</sup>

In the case of a transfer, absolute on its face, it cannot be construed as a pledge unless the evidence is clear and convincing.<sup>29</sup>

§ 17. — Questions of Law and Fact

Ordinarily it is the province of the court to determine questions of law and that of the jury to determine questions of fact, with respect to whether or not a transaction constitutes a pledge.

In accordance with the general rules, ordinarily it is the province of the court to determine questions of law<sup>30</sup> and that of the jury to determine questions of fact,<sup>31</sup> with respect to whether or not a transaction constitutes a pledge.

§ 18. — Acknowledgment; Recording and Registration

Unless required by statute a contract of pledge in writing need not be acknowledged or recorded.

In the absence of statute a contract of pledge in writing need not be acknowledged.<sup>32</sup>

Since a contract of pledge ordinarily is not required to be in writing, as discussed supra § 12, in the absence of statute requiring it a written contract of pledge need not be registered or recorded;<sup>33</sup> and statutes which require the recording or registration of a contract of sale,<sup>34</sup> an assignment in trust,<sup>35</sup> or a mortgage,<sup>36</sup> are inapplicable to a pledge. Under some statutes, however, a written contract of pledge is not valid as against third persons unless it is duly registered and recorded,<sup>37</sup> and a third person within the meaning of this rule includes the seller of the property pledged, who seeks to recover the purchase price thereof from the pledgor,<sup>38</sup> and also includes other creditors of the pledgor where the pledge has been made to secure a particular debt.<sup>39</sup>

§ 19. Delivery and Possession

- a. Necessity
- b. Sufficiency in general
- c. Continued possession

a. Necessity

Under both the civil and the common law, as affirmed by statute in some jurisdictions, it is essential to the validity of a pledge that actual or constructive possession of the pledged property be delivered to the pledgee.

Under both the civil and the common law, as affirmed by statute in some jurisdictions, it is essential to the validity of a pledge of personal property that either actual or constructive possession of the pledged property be delivered to the pledgee,<sup>40</sup>

or to someone as his agent or representative,<sup>41</sup> or, under some statutes, to a third person agreed on as pledgeholder.<sup>42</sup> The purposes of this requirement are not only to furnish evidence of the contract of pledge but also to furnish notice to third persons dealing with the property,<sup>43</sup> and to prevent fraud and deception.<sup>44</sup> Although a contract of pledge is made and acted on in good faith, if there is no actual or constructive delivery and change of possession of the property there is no valid pledge,<sup>45</sup> and the pledgee obtains no lien at law on the property although he actually advances money on the faith of the contract of pledge,<sup>46</sup> particularly as against creditors or subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith,<sup>47</sup> such as attachment or execution creditors of the pledgor,<sup>48</sup> and this is especially true under a statute which makes every charge on personalty, unless actual possession in good faith accompanies it, void as to any creditor prior to the recording of the charge.<sup>49</sup> It has been held, however, that the fact that the property remains in the possession of the pledgor does not invalidate the pledge as between the parties,<sup>50</sup> or as against a wrongdoer,<sup>51</sup> and that all who claim under the pledgor<sup>52</sup> or who acquire their rights with notice of the pledge<sup>53</sup> are bound.

In the absence of a statute providing otherwise, delivery and possession are not merely a consequence of the relation, but are the very essence of the contract of pledge,<sup>54</sup> for until the pledgee takes possession his lien thereon is merely inchoate<sup>55</sup> and cannot be claimed except as to articles thereafter delivered.<sup>56</sup> Where the pledgee does take posses-

Executory contract. Where delivery of possession of the property pledged is not made to the pledgee, the transaction, although otherwise sufficient as a pledge, will constitute merely an executory contract for the creation of a pledge.<sup>59</sup>

Delivery in escrow of property to be delivered to the pledgee on the happening of certain conditions which do not occur is not a sufficient delivery.<sup>60</sup>

b. Sufficiency in General

- (1) Time of delivery
- (2) Manner of delivery
- (3) Possession pursuant to contract
- (4) Property already in pledgee's possession
- (5) Property remaining on pledgor's premises
- (6) Possession by agent or third person for pledgee

(1) Time of Delivery

In order to constitute a present valid pledge, as against creditors or subsequent purchasers in good faith, ordinarily there should be an immediate change of possession to the pledgee. Subsequent delivery will validate a prior pledge in the absence of intervening fraud or creditors' rights.

In order to constitute a present valid pledge, as against creditors or subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith, ordinarily there should be an immediate change of possession of the property to the pledgee.<sup>61</sup> Possession delivered to the pledgee at a subsequent time will validate the pledge and render it effectual,<sup>62</sup> even as against intermediate creditors at large of the pledgor,<sup>63</sup> except where there has been fraud<sup>64</sup> and except as against creditors who have in the meantime acquired specific rights or liens on the property pledged.<sup>65</sup> The subsequent delivery will relate back to the date when the contract or pledge was made.<sup>66</sup> A contract of pledge unaccompanied by delivery of the property, and ineffectual for that reason, has been held not per se fraudulent.<sup>67</sup>

(2) Manner of Delivery

As a general principle, in order for a pledge of property to be effectual as against innocent third persons, delivery must be made in such manner and be accompanied by such change of possession as the nature of the property and the surrounding circumstances will reasonably permit. Under proper circumstances, and in the absence of a statutory prohibition, the delivery of pledged property may be constructive or symbolic.

Matters considered

In determining whether delivery of property pledged was legally effective, it was proper to consider character of property, use to be made thereof, nature and object of transaction and position of parties, and particular circumstances were therefore important.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Reconstruction Finance Corporation, C.C. A.Pa., 120 F.2d 254.

delivery and possession depending to a great extent on the nature, bulk, and situation of the property.<sup>69</sup> Ordinarily, actual delivery of the pledged property is sufficient<sup>70</sup> in the case of corporeal property<sup>71</sup> without any written transfer of the title.<sup>72</sup> Manual delivery or manual taking possession of the property pledged is not always essential to the validity of a pledge,<sup>73</sup> and the delivery is sufficient if there are circumstances which in contemplation of law are deemed sufficient to pass the possession of the property,<sup>74</sup> especially where in the case of bulky articles manual delivery would be inconvenient;<sup>75</sup> but if the property is capable of manual delivery there should be actual delivery.<sup>76</sup>

In whatever manner the pledged property is delivered, in order to be effective as against creditors and other innocent third persons the delivery must be clear and unequivocal,<sup>77</sup> and there must be at all times an open and visible change of possession or custody of the property,<sup>78</sup> so complete and effective as to pass the property and its exclusive control and dominion to the pledgee,<sup>79</sup> who must hold openly and adversely to the pledgor.<sup>80</sup> It has been held that the delivery must be as complete as is required in the case of a sale of personal property.<sup>81</sup>

The pledgee should exercise due care to negative the existence of ostensible ownership in the pledgor,<sup>82</sup> and such means should be resorted to as fairly to put third persons on inquiry;<sup>83</sup> but the giving of notice to the public in such a manner as to insure to all persons dealing with the pledgor knowledge of the existence of the pledge is not necessary.<sup>84</sup>

A written acceptance of property delivered, under a written contract of pledge, is not required.<sup>85</sup>

Constructive or symbolic delivery in general. Under proper circumstances, and in the absence of a statutory prohibition, the delivery of pledged property may be constructive,<sup>86</sup> or it may be a symbolic

Motor vehicle

In general, it cannot be said that a motor vehicle is so bulky or otherwise of such character as to render manual delivery thereof to the pledgee either impossible or inconvenient, so as to permit a constructive delivery, in view of the fact that a motor vehicle is portable by its own power and manual delivery thereof is not only possible but can be made without inconvenience.—Fletcher American Nat. delivery,<sup>87</sup> which may be made by delivering a writing which sufficiently describes the property pledged to make it capable of identification,<sup>88</sup> or by substituting something as a symbol in place and stead of actual and real delivery.<sup>89</sup> Delivery may be sufficiently made of the contents of a house or warehouse by the delivery of a key,<sup>90</sup> but delivery of a key to a structure does not necessarily, in and of itself, constitute a symbolic delivery of the goods located therein,<sup>91</sup> and whether it does so depends largely on the facts and the intention of the parties.<sup>92</sup> So also, delivery may be made by the delivery of a part of the whole,<sup>93</sup> by the delivery of an order which is accepted by a warehouseman,<sup>94</sup> by the delivery of a bill of lading, as discussed infra § 20, or of a deposit in a savings bank by delivery of the pass book.<sup>95</sup> If the property is present it may be delivered by the pledgor committing it to the exclusive control and charge of the pledgee,<sup>96</sup> especially if this is followed by an act of dominion or possession by the pledgee or his agent.<sup>97</sup> A delivery of samples to the agent of the pledgee to facilitate sales on behalf of the pledgor is not a delivery of the goods.<sup>98</sup>

(3) Possession Pursuant to Contract

It is essential that the possession and control of the property should come to the pledgee pursuant to an agreement that it shall be held by the pledgee as security.

It is essential that the possession and control of the property should come to the pledgee pursuant to an agreement that it shall be held by the pledgee as security;<sup>99</sup> and delivery in accordance with the terms of such a previous contract supplies the necessary element to render the pledge complete.<sup>1</sup> A mere agreement by the debtor that the creditor shall take and hold certain property as security for his debt is insufficient to constitute a delivery.<sup>2</sup>

(4) Property Already in Pledgee's Possession

As a general rule, if the pledgee is already in possession of the property pledged, the contract of pledge constitutes, by operation of law, a delivery of such property the moment the contract is completed.

As a general rule, if the pledgee is already in possession of the property pledged, although for another purpose,<sup>3</sup> the contract of pledge constitutes, by operation of law, a delivery of such property the moment the contract is completed,<sup>4</sup> and the pledge becomes effectual without any further delivery or change of possession.<sup>5</sup> It has been held, however, that even in such a case there must be an open and visible change in the nature of the possession so as to impart notice to all desiring thereafter to secure any interest in or to the property pledged.<sup>6</sup> It has also been held that, where the pledgee is not in possession of the property for himself, but for another, in order to constitute him a pledgee, a further transfer of possession to him must be made.<sup>7</sup> Possession by an agent or servant of property which he is employed to guard, being the possession of the master, is not sufficient to support a pledge of such property to the agent or servant.<sup>8</sup>

(5) Property Remaining on Pledgor's Premises

A mere setting apart of designated personalty as a pledge or security is sufficient as between the parties to create a lien. A valid delivery, as against third persons, may be made by segregating the property and placing it in the custody of the pledgee or a special bailee.

A mere setting apart of designated personalty as a pledge or as security is sufficient as between the parties to create a lien.<sup>9</sup> As against third persons, where the nature of the property is such that a valid delivery may be made without removing it from the premises of the pledgor, a sufficient delivery may be made by segregating the property and placing it in the custody of a special bailee who can at all times have control over it,<sup>10</sup> although the bailee is an employee of the pledgor,<sup>11</sup> or by placing it in the custody of the pledgee.<sup>12</sup> As a general rule, if the property remains on the pledgor's premises, the property must be so separated and marked as to give notice of the pledgee's possession to third persons who might deal with the pledgor.<sup>13</sup> It has been held that merely pointing out and counting certain property on the pledgor's premises is not sufficient without a further delivery.<sup>14</sup>

part of a larger uniform mass, separation from such mass is not necessary to constitute an appropriation of the property to the contract of pledge, if the symbol of title is delivered.<sup>15</sup>

(6) Possession by Agent or Third Person for Pledgee

In the absence of statute, it is immaterial to the validity of a pledge whether the pledgee himself holds the property or a third person holds it for him, where all the parties agree that the property shall be held as security for the pledgee. As a general rule, a change of possession required for the validity of a pledge is not effected where the pledgor is left in control of the property as custodian for the pledgee or under an agreement by which he is to hold or manage the property as agent for the pledgee.

In the absence of statute, it is immaterial to the validity of a pledge whether the pledgee himself holds the property or a third person holds it for him;<sup>16</sup> and therefore, where all the parties agree that the property shall be held as security for the pledgee, delivery of possession, instead of being made directly to the pledgee, may be made to an agent or trustee of the pledgee;<sup>17</sup> or, by agreement, it may be delivered to, or left in the possession of, a third person to hold for the pledgee,<sup>18</sup> provided the third person has notice of the trust and accepts the obligation it imposes,<sup>19</sup> and such third person may even be an agent, clerk, or servant of the pledgor.<sup>20</sup> Where the property at the time of the pledge agreement is in the possession of a third person, the pledge may become effectual without further delivery<sup>21</sup> on notification to the third person that the property has been pledged.<sup>22</sup> It is sufficient if possession is delivered to a third person and afterward assented to by the pledgee,<sup>23</sup> or the property may be held by two jointly in pledge for one of them, provided they both assent.<sup>24</sup>

Where the property is delivered to, or left in the possession of, a third person, it must be so set apart and marked as to constitute an actual change of possession and to give the pledgee control over it.<sup>25</sup> The validity of the pledge is not affected by the fact that, after delivery to a third person, the pledgor assists, with or without the knowledge of the pledgee, in taking care of the property.<sup>26</sup> Where a single collateral is pledged by two separate and distinct contracts to two creditors whose claims aggregate the value of the collateral, possession by one is a possession for the benefit of the other, and in this respect each is the agent of the other.<sup>27</sup>

Successive pledges. A pledgee who already holds property to secure his debt may, by consent of the parties, become the pledgee for another creditor after the expiration of his pledge;<sup>28</sup> and, where the subsequent pledge is made subject to the lien of the original pledgee, the possession of the former pledgee may be regarded as the possession of the latter one through the agency of the former, for the purpose of validating the subsequent pledge.<sup>29</sup>

ered to the agent of the pledgee,<sup>30</sup> although the property remains on the pledgor's premises.<sup>31</sup>

Pledgor in possession as custodian or agent of pledgee. As a general rule, a change of possession required for the validity of a pledge is not effected where the pledgor is left in control of the property as custodian for the pledgee<sup>32</sup> or under an agreement by which he is to hold or manage the property as agent for the pledgee.<sup>33</sup> Such possession, however, has been upheld as sufficient to support the pledge under exceptional circumstances, where a transfer of possession is impossible or inconvenient because of the nature of the property<sup>34</sup> or where the pledgor is left in possession by the pledgee for a special purpose.<sup>35</sup> Under some statutes the pledgor may retain possession of the property, where the contract of pledge so provides, and is properly acknowledged and recorded;<sup>36</sup> but since such a statute is in derogation of the common law, it must be strictly construed.<sup>37</sup>

c. Continued Possession

Ordinarily after the delivery of possession of the property pledged, the pledgee, or depositary for him, must retain the continuous possession and control of the property in order for the pledge to remain in effect.

As a general rule, after the delivery of possession of the property pledged, the pledgee, or depositary for him, must retain the continuous possession and control of the property in order for the pledge to remain in effect,<sup>38</sup> and if there is no such continued possession the pledgor's creditors may levy

§ 20. — Of Written Instrument

- a. In general
- b. Accounts
- c. Bills of lading
- d. Bills or notes
- e. Bonds

a. In General

Where property is represented by an instrument in writing, a valid pledge of the property may be effected by a transfer of such instrument.

Where property is represented by an instrument in writing, a valid pledge of the property may be effected by a transfer of such instrument.<sup>40</sup> Incorporeal property,<sup>41</sup> such as a claim or chose in action,<sup>42</sup> may be pledged only by a transfer or delivery of the written evidence of the property or obligation. Under some statutes where the thing given in pledge consists of a credit or instrument not negotiable the debtor of such pledged credit or instrument must be notified in writing of the giving of the pledge,<sup>43</sup> but such a statute has been held to be without application to the immediate parties to the pledge agreement, and may be invoked only by third persons.<sup>44</sup>

b. Accounts

An account may be pledged by a transfer of the book in which it is contained, or by delivery of the original contract of indebtedness with a written assignment thereof, or by a transfer of a list of the account with the understanding between the parties that it shall be regarded as security.

An account may be pledged by a transfer of the book in which it is contained,<sup>45</sup> but it may also be transferred without the book where delivery of the book would be impracticable.<sup>46</sup> Delivery of the original contract of indebtedness with a written assignment thereof<sup>47</sup> or a transfer of a list of the account with the understanding between the parties that it shall be regarded as security<sup>48</sup> may be sufficient, provided notice thereof is given to the debtor.<sup>49</sup> It is not sufficient merely to deliver a copy of the account without an assignment thereof;<sup>50</sup> and, although it is not necessary that the pledgee shall be given the sole right of collection,<sup>51</sup> and the validity of the pledge is not affected as between the parties by the fact that the pledgor reserves the right to make collections,<sup>52</sup> such reservation may render the transaction void as against creditors and other third persons,<sup>53</sup> especially where the pledgor

Substitution of symbol

Statute providing that actual delivery essential to contract of pledge is not necessary with respect to incorporeal rights which are given in pledge, and that delivery is merely fictitious and symbolic, did not dispense with delivery in case of pledge of incorporeal rights, but requires that something must be substituted as a symbol in place and stead of actual and real delivery.—Liberty Farms v. retains possession of the account and of the right to collect without keeping collections separate.<sup>54</sup>

c. Bills of Lading

The delivery of a bill of lading as security is a sufficient delivery of the goods to sustain the pledge, without an assignment or indorsement of the bill.

The delivery of a bill of lading as security is a sufficient delivery of the goods, for which the bill of lading was issued, to sustain the pledge,<sup>55</sup> without an assignment or indorsement of the bill.<sup>56</sup> Such a delivery constitutes a good symbolic delivery of the goods represented by the bill, and the pledgee thereby acquires a lien on them or title to them which he may hold until the loan is paid.<sup>57</sup>

d. Bills or Notes

Delivery and possession are essential to a valid pledge of a bill or note. A pledge thereof may be effected by simple delivery of the bill or note without an indorsement or other writing.

Delivery and possession are essential to a valid pledge of a bill or note.<sup>58</sup> A valid pledge thereof may be effected by simple delivery of the bill or note to the creditor<sup>59</sup> or to someone for him,<sup>60</sup> without an indorsement or other writing,<sup>61</sup> and without the necessity of notice to the maker.<sup>62</sup> Delivery of a bank's bills receivable to another bank for selection of securities to be held as a pledge for a loan, pursuant to a contract fixing no time for selection, is a valid pledge,<sup>63</sup> and in the absence of fraudulent intent the pledge will not be ineffectual as to renewals, the originals of which have not been surrendered to the makers.<sup>64</sup> A note deposited in a bankruptcy court is not validly pledged to an intervener by a symbolic delivery of a copy of the note so as to give the pledgee any rights against a garnishing creditor of the pledgor.<sup>65</sup>

Where the pledgee already has possession of the pledged note, no change of possession is necessary.<sup>66</sup> A note in the possession of a third person may be pledged by a written assignment thereof without an actual delivery to the pledgee,<sup>67</sup> but a note in the possession of an indorsee cannot be pledged by the maker without a transfer of possession to the pledgee.<sup>68</sup> It is not essential to a valid second pledge, subject to a first pledge of notes in possession of the first pledgee, that there be any further actual delivery;<sup>69</sup> but, if the first pledgee agrees to the second pledge, his possession will be regarded as the possession of the second pledgee also, through the agency of the first pledgee.<sup>70</sup>

Notice of acceptance. Where notes are pledged by the payee as collateral, it is not necessary for the pledgee to notify the payee of his acceptance of them as collateral, further than the keeping of the notes indicates and gives notice that they are accepted.<sup>71</sup>

e. Bonds

Delivery and possession are essential to the validity of a pledge of bonds, and a valid pledge thereof may be effected merely by delivery of the bonds or by the delivery of a written assignment thereof.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

§ 21. In General

- a. Construction and operation in general
- b. Trust relationship
- c. Estoppel

a. Construction and Operation in General

As a general rule, a pledge does not affect the rights of the parties under the contract or obligation it is given to secure. The general rules of construction of contracts apply in construing a contract of pledge.

As a general rule, the delivery of a pledge does not affect the rights of the parties under the contract or obligation it is given to secure<sup>75</sup> except as the pledge contract provides for additional security<sup>76</sup> or as the parties contract by special agreement.<sup>77</sup> Where the contract so provides, the pledgee must rely solely on the property pledged as security for the debt and not on the personal liability of the pledgor.<sup>78</sup> The pledgee does not, by virtue of the transaction, become liable for the pledgor's obligations with respect to the thing pledged.<sup>79</sup>

The general rules of construction of contracts apply in construing a contract of pledge.<sup>80</sup> Accordingly, the rights and liabilities of the parties are, if possible, to be construed and enforced according to the intention of the parties as determined from the terms of the contract of pledge and the subject matter,<sup>81</sup> the course of dealing to which it relates,<sup>82</sup> and the surrounding circumstances;<sup>83</sup> and, where the intention is clear and contravenes no rule of law and sufficient words are used to arrive at the intention, it should be enforced irrespective of technical rules of construction.<sup>84</sup>

The pledge must be strictly construed<sup>85</sup> and enforced in accordance with its terms,<sup>86</sup> and the pledgee<sup>87</sup> or the pledgor<sup>88</sup> has the right to exact strict performance of the contract. An ambiguous pledge agreement must be construed with some degree of strictness against the person preparing it,<sup>89</sup> and, where the contract has been prepared by the pledgee, that construction should be given to it which is the more favorable to the pledgor.<sup>90</sup> It has been held that if the contract is susceptible of two constructions the one most favorable to the pledgee should not be adopted.<sup>91</sup> A statute which determines the contract of pledge is as much a part of the contract as though actually written into it.<sup>92</sup>

Modification. A contract of pledge may be changed at any time by consent of the parties thereto,<sup>93</sup> although it is denominated an irrevocable assignment and pledge, and declared to be intended to endure until the obligation for which the pledge is given is paid;<sup>94</sup> and it is immaterial that the original contract has been recorded, where such recordation was not required by law.<sup>95</sup> After the contract of pledge is made neither party can, by anything he alone may do, vary the rights of the other party,<sup>96</sup> but by his promise to extend the time of payment or by his conduct may change the duties and obligations of the parties to each other as prescribed by the original contract of pledge.<sup>97</sup>

b. Trust Relationship

The very nature of the pledge transaction gives rise to a trust relationship between the pledgor and the pledgee, with its consequent duties to protect the debt or obligation and the collateral.

The duties and relations of a pledgor and pledgee are governed more by the general maxims of equity than by the strict rules of the common law.<sup>98</sup> The very nature of the transaction gives rise to a trust relationship between the pledgor and pledgee<sup>99</sup> with its consequent duties to protect the debt or obligation and the collateral,<sup>1</sup> and the pledgee is presumed to act for the pledgor's interest as well as his own, although their interests are not identical.<sup>2</sup> For the purposes of the pledge, the pledgee holds the pledged property in trust first for himself to the extent of his claim and then for the pledgor;<sup>3</sup> and the same rules apply whether the collateral pledged is the obligation of a third person or of the debtor himself.<sup>4</sup> If the duties of the pledgee as trustee for the debtor are defined by express contract, the terms of the contract govern as to the nature and extent of the trust;<sup>5</sup> but limitations in the contract on the liability which the law would imply against the pledgee must be plainly expressed.<sup>6</sup>

The pledgor, by the act of pledging, impliedly engages that he is the general owner of the property pledged, and is estopped to deny the equitable rights of the pledgee therein. The pledgee is estopped to deny the title of the pledgor.

The pledgor, by the act of pledging, impliedly engages that he is the general owner of the property pledged,<sup>7</sup> and is estopped to deny the equitable rights of the pledgee therein<sup>8</sup> unless it particularly appears in the contract that he has a lesser interest in the property.<sup>9</sup> If he pledges as his own property which does not belong to him, he is estopped to set up a title to it subsequently acquired by him during the existence of the pledge.<sup>10</sup>

himself<sup>12</sup> or by setting up the title of a third person to the property pledged to him by the pledgor.<sup>13</sup> Therefore as long as the pledgee holds the property as collateral security he cannot claim a holding adversely to the pledgor, so as to acquire title under the statute of limitations.<sup>14</sup> He may, however, show that another was the real pledgor and owner and entitled to possession;<sup>15</sup> and it has been held that, in an action by the pledgor, the pledgee can set up the title of a third person when he does so by authority of such third person.<sup>16</sup>

§ 22. Property or Interest Pledged

The particular property or interest pledged depends on the terms of the contract of pledge.

The particular property or interest covered by the pledge depends on the terms of the contract of pledge.<sup>17</sup> In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the pledge will apply only to the interest which the pledgor owns in the property at the time of the pledge,<sup>18</sup> and the pledgee takes the property subject to any liens on it existing at that time, as discussed infra § 25. He is entitled to the benefit of any liens or collaterals by which it may be secured,<sup>19</sup> and also to any increase of the property, such as dividends on stock, as discussed in Corporations § 469 b, or interest on bonds;<sup>20</sup> and, where the pledged

§ 23. Title to Property Pledged

- a. In general
- b. Special property in pledgee
- c. Pledge of chose in action

a. In General

Ordinarily the general property or title in the thing pledged remains in the pledgor, subject to a lien in favor of the pledgee for the amount of the debt or obligation for which the pledge is given.

The interest of the pledgor in the property pledged is entirely separate and distinct from that of the pledgee;<sup>22</sup> and, as a general rule, in some jurisdictions affirmed by statute, on a contract of pledge the general property or title in the thing pledged remains in the pledgor,<sup>23</sup> subject to a lien in favor of the pledgee for the amount of the debt or obligation for which the pledge is given.<sup>24</sup> This rule applies notwithstanding an apparent transfer of legal title to the pledgee.<sup>25</sup> This general property or title in the pledgor continues until there has been a sale or foreclosure under the contract of pledge<sup>26</sup> or until the title is changed in some judicial proceeding;<sup>27</sup> and, even though the pledgee is deemed the legal owner of the pledge, the pledgor has not only a technical, but a substantial, interest, where the debt is less than the value of the property pledged.<sup>28</sup>

After pledgor's default. On the pledgor's default the property in the thing pledged does not become

On the death of the pledgor the property remains as it was when pledged; it belongs to his estate, encumbered, however, with the charge put on it by decedent for the payment of his debt.<sup>31</sup>

b. Special Property in Pledgee

Ordinarily a pledgee of personal property does not acquire the legal title thereto but has merely a special property or interest in the thing pledged during the continuance of the pledge.

Ordinarily a pledgee of personal property does not acquire the legal title thereto,<sup>32</sup> but the pledgee may by its terms vest title in the pledgee.<sup>33</sup> The pledgee is presumed to hold the property pledged subject to the pledgor's title,<sup>34</sup> and, as a general rule, in some jurisdictions affirmed by statute, the pledgee has merely a special property or interest in the thing pledged during the continuance of the pledge,<sup>35</sup> which vests in the pledgee the right to the property as far as is necessary to secure payment of the debt,<sup>36</sup> and which entitles him to the possession and control of the property until his debt or obligation is paid or satisfied, as discussed infra § 29. In other words, the pledgee has a mere possessory right to, or lien on, the property until the object of the pledge is accomplished,<sup>37</sup> unless the lien is waived or lost, as considered infra § 27. He acquires no interest in the property except as security for his debt or obligation,<sup>38</sup> and his actual interest is purely contingent in that it depends for effect on something that may or may not occur.<sup>39</sup>

A pledge obtained by fraud of the pledgee, although unredeemed by the pledgor, vests no interest in the pledgee.<sup>40</sup>

Incidental rights. A pledgee's special property is sufficient to enable him to hold the thing pledged as against the pledgor,<sup>41</sup> his general creditors,<sup>42</sup> and persons claiming under subsequent assignments from the pledgor.<sup>43</sup> It is also sufficient to entitle him to recover possession of the property from a third person or to maintain trover for the conversion of the property, as considered infra §§ 37-40, unless he is stopped by his conduct to do so.<sup>44</sup>

c. Pledge of Chose in Action

The pledgor of a chose in action retains the general property therein, and the pledgee takes only a special interest or title.

The pledgor of a chose in action such as a bond, bill, or note, retains the general property therein,<sup>45</sup> and the pledgee takes only a special interest or title therein,<sup>46</sup> a lien to secure the payment of the principal debt,<sup>47</sup> of which he cannot be deprived by the pledgor, as by a release, without first paying the debt secured;<sup>48</sup> and, where the obligation of a third person is given in pledge, the pledgor alone cannot make a valid agreement with the obligor changing the terms of the obligation.<sup>49</sup> Whatever special interest is necessary is vested in the pledgee to enable him to exercise the right guaranteed to him by the contract<sup>50</sup> or to discharge the obligation imposed on him.<sup>51</sup> By taking the chose as collateral security the pledgee undertakes to account to the debtor,<sup>52</sup> and where, for the purposes of the pledge, the legal title to the chose is passed to the pledgee, he holds it or the proceeds in trust primarily for himself and secondarily for the pledgor.<sup>53</sup>

§ 24. Nature and Extent of Lien

A pledge casts a lien on the property pledged, and the nature and extent of the lien are governed by the terms of the contract of pledge.

A pledge casts a lien on the property pledged,<sup>54</sup> which is more than a simple lien.<sup>55</sup> The nature and extent of the lien, in a particular case, are governed by the terms of the contract of pledge,<sup>56</sup> and, as long as the debt remains unpaid, the collateral security continues to be charged with the lien unless changed by subsequent contract or conduct of the

§ 25. Priorities

- a. In general
- b. Effect of recording statute

a. In General

As a general rule a pledgee acquires a superior right to the property and its proceeds as against all persons except those who held prior liens on the property at the time the pledge took effect.

Since the pledgee, by act of the pledgor, acquires in addition to his original right against the pledgor a right or interest in the thing itself which is the subject of pledge, as discussed supra § 23, as a general rule he acquires a superior right to the property and its proceeds as against all persons<sup>64</sup> except those who held prior liens on the property at the time the pledge took effect<sup>65</sup> and who have not agreed to subordinate their liens to that of the pledgee.<sup>66</sup> Ordinarily a pledgee acquires a right superior to any right which can thereafter be given by the pledgor;<sup>67</sup> and, except where the equities of the case are such as to give a subsequent purchaser, pledgee, or creditor a prior right,<sup>68</sup> he is entitled to priority to the extent of his lien<sup>69</sup> over subsequent purchasers<sup>70</sup> or other creditors of the pledgor.<sup>71</sup> Where a subsequent creditor comes into possession of the property with notice of the pledgee's lien, his rights in the property are subordinate to those of the pledgee,<sup>72</sup> and the rule applies even though the pledgee has delivered the property to him where the delivery was made under order of court for another purpose.<sup>73</sup> An assignee of a conditional sales contract from a seller has been held estopped to assert his lien as superior to that of a subsequent pledgee from the buyer without notice, where the buyer had a receipted invoice and possession of the property.<sup>74</sup>

As between successive pledgees without any communication with each other, the one who lawfully obtains possession at the time of the pledge, or subsequently, is entitled to be preferred;<sup>75</sup> and therefore a pledgee in possession is entitled to priority over subsequent pledgees.<sup>76</sup> A subsequent pledgee in good faith from the pledgor, and in possession of the property pledged, is entitled to priority over a former pledgee of such property<sup>77</sup> except that, where the pledgor has wrongfully obtained possession of the property and delivered it to a subsequent pledgee, the prior pledgee has the right to require that the second pledgee shall first make application on his debt of other property of the pledgor in his hands.<sup>78</sup>

As between contractees. As between two creditors to whom the debtor has contracted to pledge the property, the one in possession will prevail.<sup>79</sup>

b. Effect of Recording Statute

Where a statute requires a contract of pledge to be recorded, a recorded contract of pledge is superior to all antecedent unrecorded claims or liens and subsequently recorded liens or pledges.

Where a statute requires a contract of pledge to be recorded, a recorded contract of pledge is superior to all antecedent unrecorded claims or liens<sup>80</sup> and subsequently recorded liens or pledges;<sup>81</sup> and an unrecorded pledge is invalid as against a subsequent pledgee, without notice,<sup>82</sup> even though the later pledge itself is unrecorded.<sup>83</sup> Under a statute requiring a conveyance of personal property to be recorded, the lien of a pledgee without notice is superior to an antecedent unrecorded vendor's lien,<sup>84</sup> and also takes priority over a vendor in an unrecorded conditional sale.<sup>85</sup> An innocent pledgee of false notes issued by the mortgagee after the original notes have been transferred by him may be entitled to priority in accordance with recording statutes where the transferees of the original notes have not recorded the transfers to them.<sup>86</sup>

§ 26. Pledgee as Bona Fide Purchaser

- a. In general
- b. As against real owner of property
- c. Pledge as security for preëxisting debt
- d. Pledgee with notice

a. In General

Where a pledgee receives possession of the property from the pledgor in good faith, the pledgee is deemed a bona fide purchaser and his claim takes priority over outstanding equities.

On a question of priority, a pledgee stands on the same footing as a purchaser,<sup>87</sup> and is deemed to be a holder for value to the extent of his lien,<sup>88</sup> but his lien must rest on the faith of the collateral pledged.<sup>89</sup> Since his interest in the property pledged is a legal interest sufficient to invoke the rule protecting bona fide purchasers,<sup>90</sup> where he receives possession of the property from the pledgor in good faith,<sup>91</sup> that is, where there is an absence not only of participation in the pledgor's fraud, but of knowledge or notice of the fraud or of facts and circumstances calculated to put an ordinarily prudent business man on inquiry to ascertain the truth,<sup>92</sup> the pledgee is deemed a bona fide purchaser and his claim takes priority over outstanding equities,<sup>93</sup> such as a prior unrecorded mortgage<sup>94</sup> or lien.<sup>95</sup> A pledgee without notice also will prevail over the right of an unpaid seller who has parted with possession of the property,<sup>96</sup> even though the terms of the sale were cash,<sup>97</sup> or over a vendor who, because of the fraud of the vendee or for other reasons, has a right to rescind the sale.<sup>98</sup>

Usury in the transaction for which a pledge is given does not affect the right of the pledgee, as a holder in due course, to recover on the collateral security.<sup>99</sup>

b. As against Real Owner of Property

In the absence of some element of estoppel, a pledgee of property from one who has no title or authority to pledge it, even though he acts in good faith, acquires no title as against the real owner.

In the absence of some element of estoppel, a pledgee of property from one who has no title or authority to pledge it, even though he acts in good faith, acquires no title as against the real owner;<sup>1</sup> and the mere possession of property, as for the purposes of safe-keeping or sale, without other evidence of ownership, or authority from the true owner to pledge, will not give the pledgee of such person in possession a lien against the true owner,<sup>2</sup> especially where the pledge is made by the pledgor for the fraudulent purpose of converting the proceeds to his own use,<sup>3</sup> since, as discussed supra § 8, a pledgor ordinarily may lawfully pledge only such right or interest as he owns in the property pledged.

Estoppel of owner. It is well settled that, where the real owner permits the pledgor to have possession of his property under apparent ownership or authority to pledge, he is estopped to assert his title as against a pledgee, to the extent that the

Failure to secure certificate of title

Finance company, financing original transaction between manufacturer and dealer, was not estopped to assert title to motor vehicle as against lender of money to dealer under security of lease agreement covering motor vehicle because it did not secure certificate of title from state highway department, since certificate is required only of one who claims to have obtained ownership from dealer.—Sunbury Finance Co. v. Boyd Motor Co., 180 A. 103, 119 Pa.Super. 412.

Possession as mere custodian

Pledge of property by broker, receiving it as mere custodian from wholesaler under written memorandum giving him no title thereto or authority to transfer title to purchaser, afforded broker's pledgee no protection under statute prohibiting one allowing another to assume apparent ownership of former's property for purpose of transferring it from setting up title thereto to defeat pledge thereof by apparent owner to one receiving it in good faith for value, pledgee being broker's successor in interest.—California Jewelry Co. v. Provident Loan Ass'n, 45 P.2d 271, 6 Cal.App.2d 506.
3. Colo.—Newton v. Cardwell Blue Print, etc., Co., 92 P. 914, 41 Colo. 492.—Gatlieb v. Hartman, 3 Colo. 53.

latter has, without notice of the real owner, taken the property in pledge on the faith of the pledgor's being the owner of, or having authority to pledge, it.<sup>4</sup> However, it has been held that, in such a case, if the pledgee holds other property of the pledgor, the owner of the property wrongfully pledged is entitled to have the pledgee first apply such other property to the debt.<sup>5</sup>

c. Pledge as Security for Preexisting Debt

The authorities differ as to whether a pledgee who receives property in good faith as security for a preexisting debt is a bona fide purchaser or holder for value.

A pledgee who receives property in good faith as security for a preexisting debt has been held to be a bona fide purchaser or holder for value,<sup>6</sup> even though there is no other consideration for the pledge<sup>7</sup> or the pledgor's title to the property is voidable at the option of a third person.<sup>8</sup> However, it has also been held that in order to constitute the pledgee a holder for value it is not sufficient that he receive the property as security for a preexisting debt,<sup>9</sup> but that he must part with something of value, or grant the debtor some indulgence, on the faith of the pledge.<sup>10</sup> Under this rule, where goods fraudulently obtained by the pledgor are pledged in good faith for a present advance and an antecedent debt owing to the pledgee, the pledgee may not be considered a bona fide transferee or pledgee of the goods in respect of the antecedent debt so as to enable him to hold the goods against the original vendor as security for such debt.<sup>11</sup>

As against subsequent creditors. The lien of a pledgee for a preexisting debt has priority as against subsequent attaching creditors of the pledgor.<sup>12</sup>

d. Pledgee with Notice

A pledgee who has either actual or constructive notice of outstanding rights or equities affecting the pledged property before he delivers up anything of value in consideration for the pledge, or in any way carries out the agreement, is not a bona fide holder of the property.

A pledgee who has either actual or constructive notice of outstanding rights or equities affecting the pledged property before he delivers up anything of value in consideration for the pledge, or in any way carries out the agreement, is not a bona fide holder of the property,<sup>13</sup> and therefore takes the property subject to all outstanding rights of other persons against the pledgor of which he has notice,<sup>14</sup> such as the rights of the real owner of the property.<sup>15</sup> As to what does or does not constitute notice, aside from actual notice,<sup>16</sup> and constructive notice of public records,<sup>17</sup> it is sufficient that the pledgee has knowledge of such facts as would put a reasonably prudent business man on inquiry that would lead to actual notice,<sup>18</sup> and, where the circumstances are such as to justify the conclusion that the failure to make inquiry arose from a suspicion that inquiry would disclose a vice or defect in title, the pledgee is charged with notice of the defect.<sup>19</sup>

The pledgee is put on inquiry and takes with constructive notice of the terms of the trust, where the property is pledged by one known to the pledgee to hold in a fiduciary capacity,<sup>20</sup> such as an agent,<sup>21</sup> guardian,<sup>22</sup> or a trustee.<sup>23</sup> However knowledge that the pledgor obtained the subject of the pledge for an inadequate consideration is not alone sufficient to charge the pledgee with notice of defective title.<sup>24</sup> Also, the fact that the loan for which the pledge is given is at a usurious rate of interest is not sufficient in itself to put the pledgee on inquiry of outstanding rights in others.<sup>25</sup>

§ 27. Waiver or Loss of Lien

- a. Express waiver
- b. Implied waiver in general
- c. Extension of time for payment of debt
- d. Resort to other remedy
- e. Loss of possession
- f. Delivery to pledgor for special purpose

a. Express Waiver

The lien of a pledgee may be released by his express agreement to that effect; but where the agreement has been procured by fraud he may reassert his claim to the property against anyone privy to the fraud.

The lien of a pledgee may be released by his express agreement to that effect,<sup>26</sup> such as by agreeing that the pledged property may be attached at the suit of a third person<sup>27</sup> or by voluntarily surrendering the pledge with intent to abandon the lien.<sup>28</sup> Such a release may be made by a pledgee without the consent of the other creditors of the pledgor, and without thereby losing his right to resort, as creditor, against the debtor's property.<sup>29</sup> A pledgee, however, is relieved from such an agreement where, while the agreement is yet executory, the consideration therefor fails;<sup>30</sup> and where the agreement has been procured by fraud the pledgee may reassert his claim to the property against anyone privy to the fraud.<sup>31</sup>

The lien of a pledgee may be waived or lost by any conduct on his part which is inconsistent with a claim of the lien.

The lien of a pledgee may be impliedly waived or lost by any conduct on his part which is inconsistent with a claim of the lien,<sup>32</sup> such as by a confusion by him of claims secured by the pledge with others unsecured, so that it is impossible to tell the amount for which he has a lien,<sup>33</sup> by any act short of a voluntary release of the pledge by which he acquiesces in the acquirement by third persons of an interest in the property<sup>34</sup> or by which he disregards his rights under the pledge and intentionally seeks to obtain a lien on the property by other means for himself<sup>35</sup> or his assignee.<sup>36</sup> Moreover, a refusal by the pledgee of a tender of the amount due on the obligation the pledge is given to secure may also extinguish the lien,<sup>37</sup> provided the tender is made in good faith and the refusal thereof is without just or reasonable cause.<sup>38</sup>

A waiver or loss of the pledge lien will not be implied from any act or conduct on the part of the pledgee which is not inconsistent with the claiming of the lien,<sup>39</sup> such as by his unsuccessfully contending that the equity of redemption has been extinguished<sup>40</sup> or by his releasing a lien on other property,<sup>41</sup> or by his making use of other security toward the payment of his debt<sup>42</sup> except where the debt is thereby discharged.<sup>43</sup>

There is, furthermore, no waiver or release of the lien by a modification of the pledge contract which does not destroy it or render its performance impossible,<sup>44</sup> by the pledgee's consent that a certain portion of the proceeds of the pledged property be applied to a purpose other than to the payment of the debt owing to him by the pledgor,<sup>45</sup> by a failure to present the principal obligation for payment within a reasonable time,<sup>46</sup> by the pledgee's acceptance of the pledgor's assignment or surrender of the property for the benefit of creditors,<sup>47</sup> by his release of the principal obligation, where his rights to the pledged property are expressly reserved,<sup>48</sup> or by the fact that the pledgor has become insolvent and the pledgee has filed claim for the full amount of the debt.<sup>49</sup>

c. Extension of Time for Payment of Debt

While a pledgee's lien on collateral may not be released by an extension of time for the payment of the original debt, an extension of time may release collateral of a third person.

While a pledgee's lien on collateral may not be released by an extension of time for the payment of the original debt,<sup>52</sup> such as by the giving of a renewal note for the one secured by the pledge, as discussed infra § 28, an extension of time for the payment of the principal obligation may release collateral of a third person pledged to secure the debt, if the extension is made without his notice and consent,<sup>53</sup> unless the pledgee had no notice that the collateral did not belong to the borrower.<sup>54</sup>

d. Resort to Other Remedy

Various remedies resorted to by the pledgee to enforce the original obligation owing to him by the pledgor have been held not to constitute a waiver by the pledgee of his lien on the pledged property.

The lien of a pledge is not waived by a suit on the original debt or obligation by the pledgee against the pledgor,<sup>55</sup> or, as discussed infra § 28, by a change of the evidence of the debt from a simple contract to a judgment. A pledgee's lien on the pledged property also is not waived by the pledgee's attempting to file his claim with the pledgor's assignee in bankruptcy,<sup>56</sup> nor is it waived by an invalid private sale of the pledged property.<sup>57</sup> Although the arrest or imprisonment of the debtor under an execution for the debt has been held not to waive the pledgee's lien,<sup>58</sup> such imprisonment has been held to suspend the pledgee's right to enforce the pledge, since the imprisonment is a satisfaction of the judgment while it lasts.<sup>59</sup>

Attachment or execution. While it has been held that a pledgee's lien is not waived by an attach-

Although pledgee knows of assignment, an assignment by the pledgor of his interest in the pledged property to a third person does not, without the pledgee's consent, release the latter's lien on the property.—Horton v. McCafferty, 84 P. 733, 42 Wash. 221.

ment or execution levied on the property pledged at the instance of the pledgee for the purpose of enforcing his lien,<sup>60</sup> it has also been held that such procedure on the part of the pledgee may constitute a waiver or abandonment of his lien,<sup>61</sup> and estop him to assert any lien other than the lien of the attachment<sup>62</sup> unless such attachment is made by the pledgee to prevent his being fraudulently deprived of his lien by the pledgor.<sup>63</sup> A pledgee does not waive his lien on the pledged property by attaching other property of the pledgor in an action against him for debt,<sup>64</sup> nor does a pledgee's issuance of a landlord's warrant to seize property in his possession as a pledge constitute a waiver of his lien as pledgee.<sup>65</sup>

e. Loss of Possession

The lien of a pledgee may be waived or lost by his abandonment of the pledged property or by his voluntary and unconditional surrender or relinquishment of possession of the property.

Since, as discussed supra §§ 19, 20, the lien of a pledgee is dependent on his possession of the pledged property, the lien may be waived or lost by his abandonment of the property,<sup>66</sup> or by his voluntary and unconditional surrender or relinquishment of possession of the property<sup>67</sup> to a person claiming possession thereof,<sup>68</sup> or by his voluntary relinquish-

ment of its possession to the pledgor,<sup>69</sup> even though such relinquishment is under restrictions as to the use of the property by the pledgor,<sup>70</sup> or under an agreement that the articles relinquished are to remain the pledgee's property.<sup>71</sup> Moreover, this rule has been held to apply even where the voluntary surrender of possession by the pledgee is induced by a misconception of his rights, for want of correct information.<sup>72</sup> So the lien of a pledgee may be waived by a surrender of possession of the property to another creditor of the pledgor<sup>73</sup> or to a purchaser from him<sup>74</sup> unless such surrender is made under an agreement for the retention of the pledgee's lien.<sup>75</sup>

A pledgee, on the other hand, may not lose his rights in the pledged property where he consents that, for a limited time or for a specific purpose, the property be placed in the hands of another person.<sup>76</sup> So, it has been held that a pledgee does not, as against the pledgor, lose possession of the property by making a subpledge of it,<sup>77</sup> and that he does not lose his lien by hiring or lending the property to persons other than the pledgor.<sup>78</sup> Also, a pledgee's delivery of possession of the pledged property to the wife of the pledgor as the agent of the pledgee has been held not to defeat his lien because of the status of husband and wife,<sup>79</sup> even though the property is not removed from the dwelling house of the pledgor and his wife<sup>80</sup> but is left in the possession of the wife and stored in a separate room of the house,<sup>81</sup> and although the pledgor performs certain acts with respect to the property in order to preserve the pledge.<sup>82</sup>

Involuntary surrender or loss. The lien of a pledgee may not be extinguished by an involuntary surrender of the pledged property by him.<sup>83</sup> So a pledgee's lien is not extinguished where he surrenders the property pursuant to a court order directing him to do so,<sup>84</sup> nor is he divested of his lien by the taking of the property out of his possession under the levy of an execution<sup>85</sup> or other legal process<sup>86</sup> against the pledgor, and even a purchaser at a sheriff's sale takes subject to the pledgee's rights.<sup>87</sup> Moreover, the lien of a pledgee is not lost on the pledgor's obtaining possession of the property by fraud<sup>88</sup> or other wrongful act,<sup>89</sup> even though it is sold by the pledgor to a bona fide purchaser.<sup>90</sup> So also the lien is not lost by the pledgee's being deprived of the possession of the property by the wrongful act of an agent<sup>91</sup> or of a third person.<sup>92</sup>

for the creditor, a delivery by him of a key to the warehouse in which the property is stored, to a receiver for the pledgor, does not destroy the pledgee's lien unless he authorized or ratified such delivery;<sup>93</sup> for, where the property is delivered to a receiver of the pledgor, his possession as officer of the court is possession of the court which appointed him, and is in the custody of the law, to be held for those ultimately entitled, and therefore his possession is not adverse to that of the pledgee.<sup>94</sup>

f. Delivery to Pledgor for Special Purpose

- (1) In general
- (2) For sale or other disposition

(1) In General

The delivery of the property by the pledgee to the pledgor for merely a temporary, limited, or special purpose ordinarily does not divest the pledgee's lien. The pledgee's lien would be lost as against bona fide purchasers for value from the pledgor while in such temporary possession, without notice of the pledgee's rights.

The delivery of the property by the pledgee to the pledgor for merely a temporary, limited, or special purpose,<sup>95</sup> as, for example, for some temporary use<sup>96</sup> or for the performance of some work on it,<sup>97</sup> does not divest the pledgee's lien as against the pledgor or his attaching creditors;<sup>98</sup> and the fact

Deposit in safety deposit boxes

Pledgee does not forfeit its rights to property which bank pledged as security for deposits because of the deposit of such property in safety deposit boxes of the bank where the property may not be removed from the boxes by the bank, its officers, or employees, and it may be removed only by designated officials of the pledgee.—Hood v. that the pledgor incurred debts after the return to him of the pledge, through mutual mistake, does not prevent a reinstatement of the pledge where it does not appear that any of the creditors had knowledge of the pledged property.<sup>99</sup> In such cases the pledgor may be regarded as holding the pledged property as trustee for the pledgee,<sup>1</sup> and, on the accomplishment of the special purpose, the pledgee may recover the property from the pledgor if he refuses to redeliver it.<sup>2</sup> However, the pledgee's lien would be lost in such cases as against bona fide purchasers for value from the pledgor while in such temporary possession, without notice of the pledgee's right.<sup>3</sup>

For collection. A redelivery by the pledgee of collateral security to the pledgor for collection only ordinarily does not divest the pledgee's lien as against the pledgor.<sup>4</sup> However, where a pledgor of notes as collateral security takes them back from the pledgee for convenience of collection, under an agreement that he will on demand return the same notes to the pledgee or replace them with others of the same amount, the special property of the pledgee has been held not to attach to money received by the pledgor in payment of the notes,<sup>5</sup> and if other notes are not in fact substituted for the pledged notes when collected, and no particular notes were by the agreement specified to be used in such substitution, the pledge has been held to fail.<sup>6</sup>

(2) For Sale or Other Disposition

Where the pledgee surrenders the possession of the pledged property to the pledgor for the sole purpose of having it sold, or otherwise disposed of, for the benefit of the pledge and the proceeds applied on the secured debt, he does not thereby lose his lien.

Where the pledgee surrenders the possession of the pledged property to the pledgor for the sole purpose of having it sold for the benefit of the pledge and the proceeds applied on the secured debt, he does not thereby lose his lien.<sup>7</sup> Moreover, the same rule applies where such delivery is for the purpose of a lease for the pledgee's benefit,<sup>8</sup> or for pledge to another creditor of the pledgor, to be returned to the first pledgee when it has performed this function.<sup>9</sup> Where, however, the pledgee voluntarily surrenders the property to the pledgor to dispose of for himself, on the mere promise that the indebtedness will be paid from a sale of the pledge, the pledgee's lien will be lost, since under such circumstances the property passes into the possession of the pledgor as general owner.<sup>10</sup>

Sale with pledgee's consent. A sale of pledged property and delivery to the purchaser with the pledgee's consent constitutes a waiver of the pledgee's lien as against the purchaser,<sup>11</sup> and the purchaser is under no duty of seeing that the proceeds of the sale are paid to the pledgee.<sup>12</sup>

Permission to ship on purchase orders

Where bank to which chattels were pledged, pursuant to the pledge agreement, permitted pledgor to ship the chattels on purchase orders given by third person, and chattels were in possession of warehouse for the bank, waiver or release of the pledge lien did not result, since a pledgee may employ pledgor as his agent to sell the pledged chattels, and does not lose his lien by allowing pledgor to contract in his own name for their sale, or by delivering the chattels on pledgor's order to the purchaser.—Harrison v. Merchants Nat. Bank of Fort Smith, C.C.A.Ark., 124 F.2d 871.

Innocent third person

Where pledgee surrendered possession of pledged property to pledgor for shipment to a purchaser who was directed to pay the price directly to the pledgee, a bank which was a party to an agreement whereby the money was to take the place of the goods, and was bound to apply the money in accordance with such agreement on a note which the pledgee had indorsed for the pledgor, did not stand in the position of an innocent third person in receiving the proceeds of the goods.—First Nat. Bank v. Hall, D.C.Me., 18 F. Supp. 44.

for other property to be held in pledge does not affect the pledgee's lien which will subsist on the substituted property.<sup>13</sup> So, where a pledgee disposes of the goods pledged, and delivers to a purchaser from the pledgor substituted goods of the same quality and value, the purchaser who takes the goods with knowledge of the lien of the pledgee may not set up the conversion as a defense in an action by the latter to recover the amount of his lien.<sup>14</sup>

The question as to what debts or liabilities are secured by a pledge is determined by the agreement between the pledgor and the pledgee, where the agreement is unambiguous;<sup>17</sup> the intention of the parties, as gathered from the entire transaction between them, is controlling;<sup>18</sup> and where the contract, prepared by the pledgee, is not clear as to whether the collateral pledged shall secure a particular indebtedness, it should be construed in favor of the pledgor.<sup>19</sup>

Where the contract shows that the collateral or property is pledged as security for a specific debt or liability, the pledgee has no lien on it for other purposes, such as for a general balance, for a running account, or for the payment of other claims;<sup>20</sup>

and therefore the collateral or property so pledged ordinarily, may not be appropriated by the pledgee to any other debt or liability of the pledgor,<sup>21</sup> regardless of his insolvency,<sup>22</sup> or unless the pledgor consents to such an appropriation of the property,<sup>23</sup> or the facts give rise to a just presumption that such was the intention of the parties.<sup>24</sup>

A pledge made to secure future advances may not be held for a previous obligation of the pledgor,<sup>25</sup> and the mere existence of a prior debt or obligation due to the pledgee does not authorize him to obtain the pledge for that debt if it was not contemplated in the contract.<sup>26</sup> The holder of collateral security for obligations which are unenforceable may not retain the security for other obligations.<sup>27</sup>

Death of one pledgor. Where two persons each deposit property to secure a past and future indebtedness, on the death of one of such pledgors the agreement that the collateral shall be held for future advances becomes inoperative,<sup>28</sup> and the property of the deceased may not be held to secure an indebtedness created subsequent to his death.<sup>29</sup>

Charges and expenses. The pledgee is entitled to a lien on the property, not only for the particular debt secured, but also for all lawful charges which he has paid on the property and for necessary expenses which he has incurred;<sup>30</sup> and it has been held that, since, as discussed infra § 74, it is the duty of the pledgee to collect collaterals, he has the right, as discussed infra § 54, to pay, out of the proceeds of the collaterals collected, the reasonable expenses of such collection, including reasonable attorney's fees.

(2) Agreement of Parties Changing Debt Secured or Terms Thereof

The pledgor may consent that property pledged as security for a particular debt shall be held by the pledgee as security for other obligations already existing or to be thereafter contracted.

The pledgor may consent that security pledged for an obligation may be retained by the pledgee notwithstanding a change in the terms of the obligation.<sup>31</sup> Also, by special agreement, the pledgor may consent that property pledged as security for a particular debt shall be held by the pledgee as security for other obligations already existing<sup>32</sup> or to be thereafter contracted.<sup>33</sup> However, only the pledgor may consent to the substitution of new obligations to be secured by the pledge,<sup>34</sup> and the pledgor is not bound by an agreement or act, to which he is not a party, attempting to make such a substitution.<sup>35</sup> Moreover, under the rule that a written agreement may not be varied or enlarged by parol, it has been held that a written contract of pledge for a specified debt may not be made to cover other indebtedness by an oral agreement between the parties.<sup>36</sup>

(3) Pledge to Secure General Indebtedness

Where the contract of pledge contains a provision showing that it is of a continuing nature and is intended to cover a general indebtedness, it may be applied to other debts or obligations of the pledgor to the pledgee.

Whether or not a contract of pledge is a continuing one should be determined by a consideration of the terms, scope, and character of the contract and the situation of the parties at the time it was executed.<sup>37</sup> Where the contract of pledge contains a provision showing that it is not intended to be limited to the particular debt or obligation existing at the time the pledge is given, but that it is of a continuing nature and is intended to cover a general indebtedness, it may be applied to other debts or obligations of the pledgor to the pledgee,<sup>38</sup> whether contracted before or after the agreement;<sup>39</sup> and this rule applies to an agreement entered into subsequent to the original agreement.<sup>40</sup>

Limitations of rule. The intention of the parties, especially of the pledgor, as determined by a proper construction of the provision as to general indebtedness, is the controlling element in the operation of the rule;<sup>41</sup> and accordingly a pledge containing such a provision will secure only such other debts or liabilities of the pledgor as the terms of the pledge show it was the intention of the parties it should secure;<sup>42</sup> and will not be extended to a debt or obligation other than that intended by the pledgor,<sup>43</sup> especially where the rights of sureties or others claiming under the pledgor are involved.<sup>44</sup>

If the language of the pledge is unambiguous and plainly shows that the parties contemplated that the collateral may be held as security for all other legal obligations or liabilities, the contract will be so construed,<sup>45</sup> but if the language is ambiguous and the meaning doubtful its provisions will be limited to a restricted class of obligations presumed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made;<sup>46</sup> and, where the pledge is on a printed form furnished by the pledgee and signed by the pledgor, any doubt arising as to its proper interpretation will be construed in favor of the pledgor.<sup>47</sup>

According to the intention of the parties, the security may be limited to other debts of the same kind as the specific debt<sup>48</sup> or to such obligations only as are held by the pledgee and on which the pledgor is liable,<sup>49</sup> or the collateral may be applied first to the specific debt and the surplus to other indebtedness;<sup>50</sup> and the provision as to general indebtedness may be restricted by a further provision as to the pledgee's power of sale and application of the proceeds.<sup>51</sup>

Validity of provision. A provision in a note authorizing the pledgee to hold collateral as security for a general indebtedness, if pledged for a particular debt, is valid.<sup>52</sup>

(4) Interest

The pledgee has the right to hold the property pledged as security for interest on an interest-bearing debt; but where a demand therefor is not made at the proper time the right thereto may be regarded as waived.

The pledgee has the right to hold the property pledged as security for interest on an interest-bearing debt.<sup>53</sup> However, where a demand therefor is not made at the proper time, the right thereto may be regarded as waived,<sup>54</sup> especially where the amount of interest is small.<sup>55</sup>

(5) Renewal of Note or Other Alteration in Form of Evidence of Debt

Ordinarily, pledged property may be retained and applied to the satisfaction, in any changed form, of the obligation it secures.

As a general rule, pledged property may be retained and applied to the satisfaction, in any changed form, of the obligation it secures.<sup>56</sup> Therefore, where the secured indebtedness is evidenced by a promissory note, unless it is apparent that the collateral was intended as security only for the original note,<sup>57</sup> the extension or renewal of the note does not affect the pledgee's interest in the property pledged, but it may be retained as security for the indebtedness in its new form,<sup>58</sup> especially where the pledge is of a continuing nature<sup>59</sup> and the renewal is made in the ordinary course of business.<sup>60</sup>

The rule applies even though the new note is given only for an unpaid balance on the old one,<sup>61</sup> or includes also another debt,<sup>62</sup> and although a change is inadvertently made in the form of the note on renewal.<sup>63</sup> Furthermore it has been held that the rights of the pledgee to the property are preserved by such a renewal, even though the contract of pledge is not renewed.<sup>64</sup> However, on the renewal of a note by different parties, the pledgee has no right to retain as security for the new note property of a third person, deposited as collateral for the old note, without first obtaining his consent;<sup>65</sup> and where a note is made to the order of

Judgment. Where a judgment is recovered by the pledgee on the debt secured and such judgment is not paid, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary the judgment does not operate to release the property from the lien of the pledge, but it may be held as security for the judgment.<sup>67</sup>

(6) Debts of Other Person or of Same Person in Different Capacity

Where property is pledged as security for the debt of a particular debtor, unless the pledgor consents thereto, it may not be held as security for the debt of another person or for a debt of the original debtor in a different capacity.

Where property is pledged as security for the debt of a particular debtor, unless the pledgor consents thereto,<sup>68</sup> it may not be held as security for the debt of another person<sup>69</sup> or for a debt of the original debtor in a different capacity.<sup>70</sup>

If a pledge is made to secure a joint debt of two or more persons, it does not ordinarily cover a debt of one of them individually,<sup>71</sup> nor does it cover demands against such persons jointly with others,<sup>72</sup> since it covers only liabilities similar to that of the original demand, that is, the joint liabilities of the obligors.<sup>73</sup> Property which is pledged for a debt due to an individual may not be held for a debt due to a firm of which the individual pledgee is a member.<sup>74</sup> Also, property pledged to secure a debt due by an individual ordinarily may not be applied to a debt of a partnership of which the pledgor is a member<sup>75</sup> or to an obligation owed by him and a partnership of which he is a member.<sup>76</sup>

While it has been held that, where the pledge contains a clause covering general indebtedness, it may be held to apply to a debt of the pledgor's firm to the pledgee,<sup>77</sup> and that such a clause may be sufficient to authorize the holding of the collateral pledged for the individual note of a corporate officer, as collateral for his liability as one of the officers of the corporation who individually indorsed a note of the corporation,<sup>78</sup> it has also been held that

Reason for rule

Liability of indorser of note, with-in meaning of collateral note which indorser as maker had executed, and which provided that collateral should be held as general collateral for any or all obligations due or to become due, arose prior to maturity of note, and the fact that liability of officer on his own note to holder was sole and separate obligation whereas liability as indorser on corporation's note was joint liability with coindorser did not render provision of officer's own note, that its collateral should be held as general collateral for any or all obligations, inapplicable to his liability on corporation's note, since his liability on note was joint and several and not joint only, and the fact that note of corporation, which was indorsed by officer of corporation individually, was executed prior to execution of collateral note by such officer individually as maker did not require holding that collateral could not be held as general collateral for corporation's note, where corporation's note had been extended from time to time and corporation and its president had been treated as one. —Goldenberg v. Wardell, supra.

a pledge made to secure the pledgor's individual notes and any other liabilities of the maker to the payee or his assigns, due or to become due, may not be applied to his joint and contingent liability as indorser of notes for the obligation of a corporation.<sup>79</sup> A pledge in the name of a firm, owned by an individual, of which fact the pledgee is aware, may cover the personal indebtedness of the pledgor.<sup>80</sup>

A purchaser or assignee of the secured obligation from the pledgee is not entitled to avail himself of the collateral or any surplus thereof in satisfaction of his own unsecured claims against the pledgor<sup>81</sup> unless the contract of pledge, in terms, runs to the holder or holders of the original obligation.<sup>82</sup>

c. Evidence as to Persons and Debts or Liabilities Secured

The general rules of evidence apply to evidence as to persons and debts or liabilities secured by a pledge.

The general rules of evidence apply to evidence as to persons and debts or liabilities secured by a pledge.<sup>83</sup> Thus, the burden of proof is on a creditor who claims a subsequent agreement by which collateral is to be held for additional indebtedness to prove such agreement.<sup>84</sup> On the other hand, where defendant, in an action on a note, sets up a counterclaim alleging a tender of payment by himself, and a refusal by plaintiff to deliver up the collateral security, the burden is on him, although it requires proof of a negative, to prove that the collateral was given to secure the note only,<sup>85</sup> or, if given to secure some other obligation, that such obligation was discharged before the tender;<sup>86</sup> and he does not sustain such burden by testifying that he deposited the securities as security for the notes

in suit, without stating that they were deposited for no other purpose,<sup>87</sup> or by testifying that he deposited the securities with plaintiff as security for the notes and for the purposes mentioned in the agreement referred to in plaintiff's reply, where such agreement shows other purposes for holding the collateral than to secure the notes in suit, even though such agreement has been abrogated by failure of consideration.<sup>88</sup>

In ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the debt or liability secured by the pledge, in addition to the express agreements of the parties, evidence is admissible of correspondence<sup>89</sup> and conversations<sup>90</sup> of the parties with respect to the pledge, of a general course of dealing between them,<sup>91</sup> and of a general banking custom with which both parties were familiar.<sup>92</sup> Also, on a question whether securities in the possession of the creditor are held by him as collateral, evidence is admissible that about the time of the transfer of such securities to him he made advances to the debtor,<sup>93</sup> and that after the pledgee's death securities sought to be held as collateral were found among his papers attached to the principal obligation.<sup>94</sup>

On a question whether a pledgee received certain collaterals in good faith, evidence is admissible that he made advances on the faith of the securities;<sup>95</sup> and, in the case of a loan to an estate, evidence is admissible that the pledgee was informed that the loan was to be put into a corporation in which the estate was largely interested.<sup>96</sup> In attacking the good faith of the pledgee of negotiable securities who obtained them from one not the owner, it is not necessary to show that he had notice of the particular person who was the real owner.<sup>97</sup> How-

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES

§ 29. Possession and Control of Property

- a. In general
- b. Termination of pledgee's right to possession

a. In General

A pledgee is entitled to retain possession and control of the pledged property until the purposes of the pledge have been satisfied, which ordinarily is until the debt secured has been tendered or paid in full.

Since possession is the essence of a valid pledge, as considered supra § 19, the pledgee is entitled to retain possession and control of the pledged property until the purposes of the pledge have been satisfied,<sup>2</sup> as long as he does not breach the terms of the contract,<sup>3</sup> unless the parties agree to its surrender or the pledgee in some way discharges or releases it.<sup>4</sup> In the usual case of a pledge to secure payment of a debt, the pledgee can retain possession until the debt has been tendered or paid in full<sup>5</sup> or is otherwise discharged,<sup>6</sup> and this is true even though no suit will lie for recovery of the secured debt,<sup>7</sup> and entitles the pledgee to retain possession of all the property pledged.<sup>8</sup>

By special agreement of the parties provision may be made for a release of a portion of the collaterals on the payment of a part of the principal debt<sup>9</sup> or the performance of other conditions not amounting to a complete discharge of the principal obligation.<sup>10</sup>

Substitution of property pledged. In order that there may be a substitution of property pledged, it is necessary that there be an agreement to substitute it and that it should actually be substituted.<sup>11</sup>

Enforcement of right to possession without action. Where the pledgee is deprived of his possession by the pledgor, in addition to his right to bring legal or equitable proceedings, as considered infra §§ 39-42, he may peaceably and without force take possession of the pledged property, but he is not authorized to take it forcibly or to capture it from the pledgor's wife.<sup>12</sup>

Duty to enforce pledge. A third person,<sup>13</sup> or third persons in whose custody the pledged property is deposited jointly,<sup>14</sup> are bound to enforce the terms of the pledge.

b. Termination of Pledgee's Right to Possession

The pledgee's right to possession of the pledged property terminates when the purposes of the pledge have been fulfilled.

The pledgee's right to possession of the pledged property, as considered supra subdivision a of this section, terminates when the purposes of the pledge have been fulfilled.<sup>15</sup> The right is not lost by the subsequent bankruptcy of the pledgor,<sup>16</sup> or by a repurchase by the pledgee and payment by the pledgor of the debt for which repurchased,<sup>17</sup> or by a reorganization of the corporation the stock of which constituted the pledge,<sup>18</sup> or by a delivery thereof by the pledgee's agent to a disinterested third person,<sup>19</sup> although in the absence of a demand on the agent the pledgee may be unable to recover the property from the agent's depository.<sup>20</sup>

§ 30. Use of Property

The pledgee ordinarily is not entitled to use the property pledged except with the consent of the pledgor.

As a general rule the pledgee is not entitled to use the property pledged<sup>21</sup> except with the express or implied consent of the pledgor,<sup>22</sup> as where use is essential to preservation of the pledged property.<sup>23</sup> However, it has been held that a pledgee does not incur liability by using the property pledged when it is of such a character as not to be lessened by use.<sup>24</sup> A pledgee of a ship, pledged to secure amounts owed him and others, has been held entitled to keep the vessel employed and to incur some risks therein.<sup>25</sup> However, the pledgee is not entitled to make a profit from the pledged property,<sup>26</sup> and if, from the use of it profits are derived, he must, in the absence of a special agreement, account to the pledgor for them.<sup>27</sup> It has been held that the pledgor may use the original collateral for his own purposes on substitution of other of equal value.<sup>28</sup>

§ 31. Income or Profits

The pledgee is entitled, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, to the possession and control of income accruing from the pledged property during the period of the pledge; but he must account to the pledgor for all such income, and ordinarily it should be applied to the reduction of the indebtedness secured.

The pledgee's right to possession and control of the pledged property ordinarily carries with it right to possession and control of income accruing during the period of the pledge.<sup>29</sup> However, this right may be modified by an agreement between the parties for a specified portion of the income to be paid to the pledgor,<sup>30</sup> and, where the agreement so provides, the pledgee may be entitled to terminate the right to such income on the occurrence of specified conditions or events.<sup>31</sup> A pledgee who voluntarily permits the pledgor to collect the income accruing from the pledged property is estopped to claim title to collections thereof made prior to the giving of notice of claim to it.<sup>32</sup> It has been held that a pledgor may collect accounts receivable and, instead of remitting them to the pledgee, make cash payments for the equivalent.<sup>33</sup>

The pledgee must account to the pledgor for all the income, profits, and advantages derived by him from the pledged property.<sup>34</sup> Ordinarily such profits or income should be applied to the reduction of the indebtedness,<sup>35</sup> first to the payment of the interest on the debt, then to the principal,<sup>36</sup> and any surplus remaining after all proper payments to the pledgee, including expenses, as considered infra § 32, is held for the pledgeor.<sup>37</sup>

Application of fund arising from pledged property. The pledgor cannot compel the pledgee to apply to payment of the debt in advance of its maturity a fund arising from the property pledged.<sup>38</sup>

Rental value. A pledgee is not chargeable with rental value for unused property.<sup>39</sup>

Waiver. Statutes providing that acceptance of the whole principal is a waiver of interest do not apply to a pledgor accepting in different installments the whole principal of the debt.<sup>40</sup>

Necessary expenses

Ga.—Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 184 S.E. 915, 53 Ga.App. 56.

Ownership of pledged property

Fact that security given to insure fulfillment of obligation of indorser of note belongs to maker and was pledged to indorser and subpledged by him to holder does not physical preservation and care of the property,<sup>42</sup> protecting it against liens,<sup>43</sup> or in the payment of taxes,<sup>44</sup> assessments,<sup>45</sup> and insurance premiums.<sup>46</sup> However, there can be no recovery on this theory for expenses not reasonably incurred in the care and preservation of the pledged property.<sup>47</sup>

Under express agreement. Where the parties have agreed that the pledgee shall pay specified expenses, the pledgee is not entitled to reimbursement for them.<sup>48</sup>

As between joint pledgees. In the absence of a contract that compensation for services shall be paid, joint pledgees cannot recover of each other compensation for services rendered in caring for the pledged property and converting it into money.<sup>49</sup>

b. In Subjecting Property to Purposes of Pledge

The pledgee is entitled to reimbursement for reasonable expenses necessarily incurred in subjecting the pledged property to the purposes of the pledge.

The pledgee is entitled to reimbursement for reasonable expenses necessarily incurred in subjecting the pledged property to the purposes of the pledge,<sup>50</sup> such as expenses incurred in collecting pledged choses in action.<sup>51</sup> No reimbursement will be allowed for unnecessary and unauthorized expenses.<sup>52</sup>

Reasonable attorney's fees necessarily incurred in preserving or collecting collateral may be allowed the pledgee.<sup>53</sup> However, reimbursement for attorney's fees will be denied where it was not reasonably necessary to incur them for the purposes of the pledge<sup>54</sup> or they are unreasonable in amount or character.<sup>55</sup>

§ 33. Care of Property

- a. In general
- b. By pledgee

a. In General

A pledgor who has free access to the goods pledged, equally with the pledgee, has the duty to care for them, and he cannot hold the pledgee responsible for a loss which could have been prevented by the exercise of due care on his part.

Where the pledgee permits the pledgor to have free access to the goods, it is equally the duty of the pledgor to care for them, and he cannot hold the pledgee responsible for any loss which could have been prevented by due care on his part.<sup>56</sup> In such a case an unexplained loss of the goods does not raise any presumption of negligence on the part of the pledgee.<sup>57</sup>

(1) In General

The pledgee is under an implied agreement to keep safe the pledge, and must exercise ordinary or reasonable care in the preservation of the property pledged and in protecting the pledgor's rights therein.

There is an implied agreement on the part of the pledgee for the safe-keeping of the pledge.<sup>58</sup> He is under a duty to exercise ordinary or reasonable care in the preservation of the property pledged<sup>59</sup> and in protecting the pledgor's rights therein.<sup>60</sup> However, the exercise of ordinary care is sufficient;<sup>61</sup> the pledgee is not an insurer of the property pledged,<sup>62</sup> and he need not exercise every possible precaution to prevent loss.<sup>63</sup> Ordinary care is that degree of care which prudent men exercise with respect to their own property of a similar kind under similar circumstances,<sup>64</sup> and varies in accordance with the conditions affecting its exercise.<sup>65</sup>

Some authorities have stated that the pledgee is charged with the duty of an agent<sup>66</sup> or that he is a trustee,<sup>67</sup> first, to pay the debt, and second, to pay over the surplus of the pledge to the pledgor;<sup>68</sup> and that he cannot so deal with the pledged property as to destroy or even impair its value.<sup>69</sup>

Employment of agents or attorneys. The pledgee must use reasonable skill and diligence in the employment of agents and attorneys.<sup>70</sup>

Insurance. In the absence of an agreement to that effect, the pledgee is not obligated to insure the pledged property.<sup>71</sup>

(2) Liability for Loss

A pledgee is liable for the loss, destruction, or depreciation of the property pledged through his negligence, but, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, he is not liable for damage arising without legal fault on his part.

Loss, destruction, or depreciation of the property through the negligence of the pledgee imposes on him liability therefor to the pledgor.<sup>72</sup> Such liability continues for losses occurring after maturity of the debt,<sup>73</sup> and even after its discharge, as long as the property remains in the possession of the pledgee.<sup>74</sup> However, the pledgee is not liable for damage arising without legal fault on his part,<sup>75</sup> as where he makes an honest error in judgment<sup>76</sup> or where the loss is caused by overpowering force.<sup>77</sup> This rule, however, may be varied by express agreement of the parties.<sup>78</sup> Where the pledgee has agreed to keep pledged property insured he is liable for loss occurring while it is uninsured,<sup>79</sup> the measure of damages in event of total loss being the insurable value of the property.<sup>80</sup> It has been held that a contract expressly excluding the pledgee's liability for loss from specified causes should be construed as imposing liability for loss from unspecified causes.<sup>81</sup>

pledgee by law must be plainly expressed,<sup>82</sup> and cannot go so far as to authorize fraud.<sup>83</sup>

(3) Pledges of Life Insurance Policies

In the absence of an agreement to such effect, a pledgee is not required to pay premiums on a life insurance policy pledged to him.

In the absence of an agreement to such effect, the pledgee is not obligated to pay premiums on a life insurance policy pledged to him.<sup>84</sup> The pledgee is not authorized to surrender the policy without the pledgor's consent.<sup>85</sup>

(4) Evidence and Questions for Jury

In the case of loss or injury to the property pledged, the burden is on the pledgee to show the exercise of due care on his part, where he has been given exclusive possession of the pledged property. The general rules governing the admissibility and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence apply, and on conflicting evidence the question of the pledgee's negligence in caring for the pledged property is for the jury.

As a general rule, in the case of loss or injury to the pledged property, the burden is on the pledgee to show the exercise of due care on his part.<sup>86</sup> This rule does not apply, however, in a case where he has not been given exclusive possession of the pledged property.<sup>87</sup> Evidence is admissible as to the nature of the property and all the circumstances connected with its keeping by the pledgee.<sup>88</sup> Evidence that the pledgee failed to use the same care for the pledged property as for his own is strongly persuasive of negligence;<sup>89</sup> but evidence of the employment of such care, although entitled to consideration,<sup>90</sup> does not create a prima

§ 34. Sale of Property before Maturity of Debt

- a. In general
- b. Duty to sell
- c. Conduct of sale
- d. Effect of unauthorized sale; ratification

a. In General

In the absence of an agreement permitting it, a pledgee has no right to sell the pledged property before maturity of the debt, but such right may be conferred by the contract of pledge.

In the absence of an agreement to such effect, the pledgee has no right to sell the pledged property before maturity of the debt.<sup>95</sup> Such a right may, however, be conferred by the contract of pledge,<sup>96</sup> although provisions therefor are to be strictly construed,<sup>97</sup> and a sale is not authorized except on happening of the conditions specified.<sup>98</sup> In the absence of the happening of the specified contingencies, the consent of the pledgor will not authorize a sale, by a pledgee with notice, as against the rights of an execution purchaser, of the rights of the pledgor in the pledged property.<sup>99</sup>

Commercial paper. A pledgee has no right, in the absence of special authority or agreement permitting him to do so, to sell commercial paper held as pledge, either at public or private sale,<sup>1</sup> except in execution of a judgment obtained after ordinary proceedings.<sup>2</sup> The power to sell may, however, be given the pledgee by express agreement,<sup>3</sup> although even in such case notice of the time and place of sale must be given the pledgor.<sup>4</sup> A statutory provision that the pledgee has no right to sell pledged notes or do otherwise than collect them at maturity and apply the proceeds on the secured debt is designed for the benefit of the pledgor,<sup>5</sup> who may waive it.<sup>6</sup>

Waiver of authorization to sell. A contract provision giving the pledgee the right to sell before default is waived by a subsequent agreement extending the date of payment and silent as to sale before default.<sup>7</sup>

7. N.Y.—Wyckoff v. Riverside Bank,

Proceeds of sale. A pledgee authorized to sell collateral before default must apply the proceeds in accordance with the terms of the contract of pledge.<sup>8</sup> However, where the pledgee is not required to sell, no duty to account arises unless and until there is a sale by the pledgee of the property pledged.<sup>9</sup> Funds derived from the sale of pledged property sold by the pledgor after redelivery by the pledgee for the purpose of sale belong to the pledgee,<sup>10</sup> and another creditor of the pledgor with notice of the pledge cannot assert a lien on such funds.<sup>11</sup>

Collection of pledged obligation. The pledgee of a note can collect it and apply the proceeds to his claim against the pledgor.<sup>12</sup>

b. Duty to Sell

In the absence of a special agreement therefor, a pledgee is not required to sell the pledged property and apply the proceeds on the debt before maturity, even though he has authority to sell or has been requested to sell by the pledgor.

In the absence of a special agreement, a pledgee is not required,<sup>13</sup> nor can he be compelled,<sup>14</sup> to sell the pledged property and apply the proceeds on the debt before its maturity,<sup>15</sup> even though he has authority to sell<sup>16</sup> or has been requested to sell by the pledgor;<sup>17</sup> and he is not liable for a loss due to depreciation in the value of the property after the failure or refusal to sell it.<sup>18</sup> However, in the case of property of fluctuating value, the pledgee has been held liable for loss due to depreciation in its value after he was requested by the pledgor to sell it.<sup>19</sup>

Under agreement. The pledgee is under a duty to sell the pledged property before maturity of the debt on the happening of conditions specified in an agreement as imposing the duty to sell,<sup>20</sup> which agreement may be made subsequent to the time the pledge was made,<sup>21</sup> and the pledgee is liable for

Profit from sale of property not pledged

Where pledgee was unable to consummate sale of specified amount of securities by delivering pledged securities and delivered instead a like amount of other securities obtained from another source, he was not required to account to the pledgor for the profit realized therefrom, even though the transaction was undertaken incident to an attempt to realize on the pledged securities.—*Fildew v. Loss falls on pledgor

When the pledgor requests the pledgee to sell and the latter refuses, the loss from a decline in value of the pledged property thereafter occurring cannot be charged against the pledgee, but falls on the pledgor.—Johnson v. First Nat. Bank, 184 S. E. 915, 53 Ga.App. 56.

Fluctuation arising from nature of security

Fluctuating value of pledge must arise from nature of security itself, rather than general fluctuation in value of all securities, to charge pledgee with negligence in selling, or failing to sell, collateral pledged as security for debt.—First Trust & Deposit Co. v. Potter, 278 N.Y.S. 847, 155 Misc. 106.

loss occasioned by his failure to sell as agreed.<sup>22</sup> However, a promise to sell, made without consideration, has been held unenforceable and imposes no duty on the pledgee or liability for loss occasioned by his failure to sell.<sup>23</sup> Even where an agreement to sell has been made, the pledgee is not obligated to sell except in accordance with the provisions of the agreement.<sup>24</sup>

Negligence. Liability of a pledgee for failure to sell pledged property may be founded on negligence as well as on the breach of an express contract;<sup>25</sup> and it has been held that, where the pledgee promises to sell the pledged property and informs the pledgor that it has been sold according to agreement, the failure to do so constitutes such negligence that, even if there was no consideration for the agreement to sell, it will render the pledgee liable for a loss arising from depreciation in value of the property pledged.<sup>26</sup>

The measure of damages for breach of the duty to sell is the resultant loss in value of the pledged property.<sup>27</sup>

Evidence. The usual rules as to sufficiency of evidence apply respecting issues arising on alleged breach of the pledgee's duty to sell.<sup>28</sup>

c. Conduct of Sale

A pledgee who sells the pledged property before maturity of the debt is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in making the sale, and he is liable for damages arising from the failure to exercise such care. As a general rule a pledgee cannot sell the pledged property to himself.

Where, in the exercise of his right or duty, the pledgee sells the pledged property before maturity of the debt, he is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence<sup>29</sup> as to the time,<sup>30</sup> place,<sup>31</sup> price,<sup>32</sup> and terms<sup>33</sup> of sale, and is liable for damages arising from failure to exercise due care in the conduct thereof.<sup>34</sup>

Notice. A pledgee with authority to sell the pledged property before maturity under certain circumstances must give notice to the pledgor in case he elects to sell on the happening of a contingency of which the pledgor may be in ignorance.<sup>35</sup> The pledgee is not bound to notify one other than the owner of the pledged property as to his intention to sell it,<sup>36</sup> particularly where the sale is made at the owner's request.<sup>37</sup>

A guaranty made by the pledgee under authority of the pledgor is binding on the pledgor,<sup>38</sup> and the usual rules governing the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence apply in connection with the pledgee's claims for reimbursement on account of moneys expended in satisfaction of the guaranty.<sup>39</sup>

Jury question. Whether the pledgee acted with ordinary care and diligence in selling the pledged property is a question of fact properly determinable by a jury.<sup>40</sup>

Sale by pledgee to himself. As a general rule the pledgee cannot purchase the pledged property<sup>41</sup> or speculate in it.<sup>42</sup> Such is the rule under a contract authorizing sale generally,<sup>43</sup> but it is competent for the parties to agree that under certain conditions the pledgee may himself become the purchaser of the pledged property before default.<sup>44</sup> Even where such an agreement has been made, however, the sale will be invalidated by fraud.<sup>45</sup> If a pledgee

An alleged "sale" by the pledgee

sells to himself without authority, the pledgor may recover the market value of the property at the time of such sale.<sup>46</sup>

d. Effect of Unauthorized Sale; Ratification

An invalid sale of pledged property does not affect the rights of the parties, but the pledgor may ratify such a sale.

The rights of the parties under the pledge are not affected by an invalid sale.<sup>47</sup> The mere possession of property as pledgee, without any other evidence of title or authority to sell, will not enable the pledgee to give a good title to the property by a sale of it.<sup>48</sup> The pledgor may, as between the pledgee and himself, ratify an unauthorized sale,<sup>49</sup> including a sale by the pledgee to himself,<sup>50</sup> and claim the benefits of it, that is, the proceeds of the sale;<sup>51</sup> and he cannot hold the pledgee for any loss resulting from a sale which he has expressly ratified<sup>52</sup> or which he has impliedly ratified by failure to repudiate within a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge thereof.<sup>53</sup>

The purchaser from the pledgee at an unauthorized sale cannot complain that the pledgee violated its obligation to the pledgor.<sup>54</sup>

§ 35. Conversion of Pledged Property in General

The wrongful or unlawful appropriation of property deposited as collateral security for a debt constitutes conversion.

The unlawful appropriation of property deposited as collateral security for a note constitutes conversion.<sup>55</sup> Conversion of pledged property by particular persons is discussed infra §§ 36-38.

§ 36. — By Pledgee

- a. In general
- b. Surrender of possession
- c. Sale
- d. Exchange for other securities

- f. Renewal of pledged collateral
- g. Compromise

a. In General

A pledgee's exercise of dominion over the property inconsistent with the rights of the pledgor or his wrongful or unauthorized disposition of the pledged property so as to put it out of his power to redeliver it on payment of the debt it secures constitutes a conversion.

A pledgee's exercise of dominion over the property pledged, inconsistent with the rights of the pledgor in and to the property,<sup>56</sup> or his disposition of the whole or part thereof inconsistent with, and subversive of, the pledgor's legal rights,<sup>57</sup> or his wrongful or unauthorized disposition of the pledged to itself for several thousand dollars less than the market value of securities pledged was invalid for fraud even though the pledge contract authorized a sale by the pledgee to itself.

Sale to pledgee

If the debtor does not ratify an unauthorized sale of the property pledged by the pledgee to himself and elects to treat it as illegal, the sale is void and the parties are remitted to their rights as they existed before any sale was made or attempted; the debtor is liable on his debt and the creditor still holds the property in pledge.—*Bardsley v. property so as to put it out of his power to redeliver it on payment of the debt it secures,<sup>58</sup> constitutes a conversion although there is no wrongful intent or motive on the part of the pledgee.<sup>59</sup> However, it has been held that a pledgee of securities rightfully in possession thereof, although the legal title thereto may be in another, is not guilty of conversion in the absence of an intent to convert.<sup>60</sup> Also, a diversion of the property pledged from the purpose originally intended is not a conversion where it takes place with the consent, knowledge, and acquiescence of the pledgor;<sup>61</sup> and it has also been held that tender of payment of the secured debt and demand for the return of the pledged property must be shown before conversion can be established.<sup>62</sup>

In order to constitute conversion, a wrongful or unauthorized disposition of the pledged property is essential<sup>63</sup> except perhaps in a case where, although the pledgee may have had actual dominion over the collateral, he has asserted the contrary to the pledgor.<sup>64</sup> A conversion is not effected by a nominal transfer of the pledge,<sup>65</sup> or delivery for a mere temporary purpose, or for a special purpose,<sup>66</sup> which does not put the property beyond the control of the pledgee; or by a mere assertion by the pledgee of ownership of the pledged property<sup>67</sup> or of the right to hold it for purposes other than those of the pledge involved;<sup>68</sup> or by the assertion of a larger right in the property pledged than he can maintain;<sup>69</sup> or by his bringing suit on it in his own name;<sup>70</sup> or by his collection of the pledged collateral<sup>71</sup> or of the income therefrom;<sup>72</sup> or by his assignment of the collateral together with the principal obligation;<sup>73</sup> or by a transfer of pledged certificates of stock under an arrangement by which he retains control over them;<sup>74</sup> or by the registra-

Retention for purpose of collection

The retention by pledgee, after notice from trustee in bankruptcy to deliver collateral to it, of some of pledged collateral for purpose of making further collections to pay balance due on notes for which collateral was pledged would not constitute conversion thereof by pledgee.—Johnston v. American Finance Corporation, supra.

tion of pledged bonds in his own name;<sup>75</sup> or by his assent to the foreclosure of a mortgage by which the collateral is secured and to the payment of a share of the expenses incident to such foreclosure from the proceeds;<sup>76</sup> or by foreclosure with consent of the pledgor.<sup>77</sup> The pledgee's act in having a pledged check certified is not a conversion thereof.<sup>78</sup>

A pledgee is not liable to the holder of an equitable lien on the property pledged as long as he does nothing to prevent the equitable lienholder from imposing the charge of his lien on the pledge.<sup>79</sup>

Use. A pledgee's application of pledged bonds to his own separate use in excess of his rights as pledgee is an illegal conversion of the property.<sup>80</sup>

Rehypothecation. An unauthorized rehypothecation of collateral for a different debt<sup>81</sup> or a misappropriation of the pledged property<sup>82</sup> is a conversion thereof.

Subordination. Where a pledgee of mortgage notes, without the authorization or ratification of the pledgor, subordinates such notes to receiver's certificates and other receivership charges, resulting in the impairment or total loss of the value of such mortgage notes, the pledgor is entitled to offset the loss thus occasioned against the claim of the pledgee.<sup>83</sup>

Effect of conversion. A pledgee's conversion of the property pledged does not amount to a payment of the pledgor's obligation,<sup>84</sup> but it only creates a right in the pledgor to set off the pledgee's liability for conversion against his claim.<sup>85</sup>

Right to collect pledged obligation. The pledgee of a note or other obligation of a third person has a right to collect it when due,<sup>86</sup> particularly where he has been authorized to collect it by the pledgor.<sup>87</sup> A pledgee has been held not authorized to accept payment before maturity of a pledged note which is payable on a day certain.<sup>88</sup> Where the obligations of a third person are pledged, the pledgee is accountable to the pledgor for payments made on such obligations by the third person and applied by the pledgee to other debts owed him by the third person.<sup>89</sup>

b. Surrender of Possession

A pledgee's surrender of the property pledged is a conversion of it for which he is liable, if it is made without the consent of the pledgor.

If, without consent of the pledgor, the pledgee surrenders possession of collateral,<sup>90</sup> either to the obligor thereunder<sup>91</sup> or to a third person,<sup>92</sup> he is liable to the pledgor for conversion. Surrender with consent of the pledgor is not a conversion.<sup>93</sup> A surrender to an invalid legal process<sup>94</sup> or a passive permission of sale under an attachment<sup>95</sup> may constitute a conversion, although, on the other hand, it has been held that there is no conversion by the pledgee where the property is taken from his possession under an attachment against the pledgor.<sup>96</sup>

c. Sale

A pledgee's unauthorized sale of the property pledged prior to the maturity of the obligation secured or the pledgor's default thereon may constitute conversion.

A pledgee's unauthorized sale of the property pledged prior to the maturity of the obligation secured or the pledgor's default thereon may constitute conversion.<sup>97</sup> However, an authorized sale is not a conversion,<sup>98</sup> nor is a sale by the pledgee to himself a conversion;<sup>99</sup> and, even if a pledgee's foreclosure of a pledged mortgage or trust deed and purchase of the property constitute a conversion, a pledgor who thereafter gives the pledgee a new note for the principal obligation, which recites a pledge of the same collateral as that foreclosed, and pays interest on the new note, thereby waives the conversion.<sup>1</sup> Irregularities in the sale of pledged property have been held not to establish a conversion where the pledgor did not suffer any prejudice therefrom and the irregularities resulted from the pledgor's own conduct.<sup>2</sup>

Maker not entitled to object. The maker of a pledged note cannot, in the absence of prejudice, take advantage of a statute rendering an unauthorized sale thereof a conversion as respects the pledgor.<sup>3</sup>

A sale under authority of statute is not a conversion<sup>4</sup> even though it purports to be under authority of a reversed judgment.<sup>5</sup>

Sale of owner's equity in pledged property. The pledgee of notes and mortgages securing them, who is also a creditor of the mortgagor, violates no duty to the pledgor by attaching and having sold at execution sale the interest of the mortgagor in the mortgaged property.<sup>6</sup>

d. Exchange for Other Securities

A pledgee's exchange of the property pledged for other securities constitutes a conversion for which he is liable, if it is made without the consent of the pledgor.

If, without consent of the pledgor, the pledgee exchanges collateral for other securities, he is liable for conversion.<sup>7</sup> However, it has been held that the pledgee's exchange of pledged securities is proper and he will not be penalized therefor, where the maker of the pledged securities is insolvent, the exchange is made as a compromise and on terms advantageous to the pledgor, and the procedure resulting in the exchange was participated in by representatives of the pledgor.<sup>8</sup> With the consent of the pledgor the pledgee may lawfully exchange the collateral for other securities.<sup>9</sup> An unexecuted agreement to exchange collateral does not amount to a conversion.<sup>10</sup>

e. Release or Transfer to Obligor of Collateral

The release or transfer of pledged collateral to the obligor thereon may constitute a conversion thereof.

Release of pledged collateral may constitute a conversion thereof.<sup>11</sup> However, it is not conversion for the pledgee of a negotiable instrument to

Pledgee's assertion of ownership of securities pledged to it was held not conversion, even though without legal warrant, where it credited aggregate principal sum thereof on pledgor's obligations, such action being in effect private sale to itself.—Bardsley v. sell and transfer the principal debt, accompanied by the pledged negotiable instrument, to the maker of the pledge instrument.<sup>12</sup>

Release of indorser. Releasing the solvent indorser of the note of an insolvent amounts to a conversion thereof.<sup>13</sup>

f. Renewal of Pledged Collateral

A pledgee's unauthorized renewal or extension of pledged collateral is a conversion thereof.

The pledgee's unauthorized renewal<sup>14</sup> or extension<sup>15</sup> of pledged collateral amounts to a conversion.

Extension of time for payment of installments which the obligor of the pledged installment contract could not meet when due is not necessarily a conversion.<sup>16</sup>

g. Compromise

A pledgee who receives as collateral security the obligation of a third person is liable for conversion if he compromises it for less than its full face value, except where he compromises it on terms advantageous to the pledgor as well as to himself.

One who receives from his debtor as collateral security the obligation of a third person ordinarily has only the power to hold such obligation and to receive payment or collect it at maturity.<sup>17</sup> He is not authorized to compromise it for less than its full face value,<sup>18</sup> or to accept in payment and discharge of it anything other than the full amount due thereon,<sup>19</sup> or to discharge a lien securing it on receipt of less than the full amount due on it;<sup>20</sup> and ordinarily if he compromises with the persons liable on the pledged collateral he is liable for conversion.<sup>21</sup> Even under an express power to sell a pledged note the pledgee cannot compromise and surrender it to the maker for a sum less than is due thereon, but enough to pay the principal debt, and such action will prima facie render him liable for the face of the note in excess of his debt.<sup>22</sup> If,

Negligence immaterial

No authority to discharge pledged debt

Pledgee to whom an evidence of debt has been pledged cannot discharge pledged debt or security therefor without consent of pledgor, and, if he releases debt or security otherwise than on collection, pledgor may hold pledgee for conversion.—Meyer v. Thomas, 63 P.2d 1176, 18 Cal.App.2d 299.

Proof of obligation in bankruptcy proceeding

Where a bankruptcy court authorizes a sale of property covered by a vendor's lien free and clear of all liens and encumbrances, a pledgee of the vendor's lien note cannot as between him and the pledgor, who is not a party to the bankruptcy proceeding, prove the note as a claim in the bankruptcy proceeding and thereby authorize the bankruptcy court, if the property sells for less than sufficient to discharge it in full, to pay less than the full amount of the note in discharge of the obligation.—Cecil v. Wise, Tex.Civ.App., 109 S.W.2d 214, error refused.

Alternative remedies

Where court orders the sale of property covered by a vendor's lien free and clear from encumbrances and a pledgee of the vendor's lien note purchases the property for a price sufficient to pay the pledgor's indebtedness to him, but insufficient to pay the note in full, the pledgor may treat this as a conversion and claim damages therefor or waive the tort and impress the land with a trust, so that the land stands in lieu of the note subject to a like lien to secure the indebtedness as the collateral note.—Cecil v. Wise, Tex.Civ. App., 109 S.W.2d 214, error refused.

Estoppel

Where a bankruptcy court orders a sale of property covered by vendor's lien free and clear from liens, notice by the pledgee to the pledgor of the vendor's lien note of his purpose to purchase the land for his own protection, if the pledgor fails to do so, does not estop pledgor to claim that the land stands in lieu of the collateral note and merely as security for the debt it was pledged to secure.—Cecil v. Wise, supra.

22. Tex.—Parmley v. Aynesworth, without consent of the pledgor, the pledgee of a note and mortgage or deed of trust releases the debt in exchange for a deed to the premises, he must account for the face of the mortgage.<sup>23</sup> However, where one of two joint obligors pledges choses in action as security for the joint debt, the pledgee may accept less than the face of the collateral with consent of the pledgor and without incurring liability to account to the other obligor for more than the amount received.<sup>24</sup>

An exception to the general rule exists in the case of a compromise by the pledgee of the pledged security on terms advantageous to the pledgor as well as to himself,<sup>25</sup> especially where the maker is insolvent and the debt is insufficiently secured;<sup>26</sup> and in such case he must account to the pledgor only for the amount actually received under the compromise.<sup>27</sup> The pledgee is justified in compromising where the pledgor's conduct is such as to render the pledgee's recovery by suit uncertain.<sup>28</sup>

With the consent of the pledgor the pledgee may lawfully compromise litigation respecting the collateral.<sup>29</sup>

§ 37. — By Pledgor

A pledgor converts pledged property where he wrongfully takes or retains possession of it or destroys it.

If the pledgor wrongfully takes or retains possession of the pledged property without the consent of the pledgee, this constitutes a conversion, for which the pledgee may maintain an action.<sup>30</sup> Also a pledgor converts pledged collateral where he obtains possession of it under an agreement to use it for a specific purpose and return it but instead destroys it.<sup>31</sup>

§ 38. — By Third Person

A third person who converts pledged property may be sued in conversion by either the pledgor or pledgee.

Where the possession of the property is wrongfully secured, or retained by a third person, he may be sued in conversion by either the pledgor<sup>32</sup> or the pledgee.<sup>33</sup>

a. In General

The pledgee's interest in the pledged property is sufficient to enable him to maintain an action against the pledgor or a third person for the recovery of the property or its proceeds.

The pledgee may maintain an action to protect his right to the possession of the property pledged,<sup>34</sup> such as detinue,<sup>35</sup> replevin,<sup>36</sup> or trover.<sup>37</sup> If the pledgor has wrongfully disturbed his possession

he has a right of action for the property or its proceeds<sup>38</sup> and can maintain replevin against the pledgor for a wrongful taking of the property pledged,<sup>39</sup> or trover for its wrongful detention by the pledgor, although it may have come rightfully into his hands by the pledgee's consent.<sup>40</sup>

Against third person. The pledgee has sufficient interest in the pledged property to sustain an action against third persons for the recovery of the property or its proceeds,<sup>41</sup> such as an action in trover,<sup>42</sup> or in detinue,<sup>43</sup> or replevin,<sup>44</sup> or other action for the recovery of the specific property.<sup>45</sup> A pledgee redelivering pledged property to the pledgor for a special purpose cannot maintain an action for its recovery or conversion against an innocent purchaser for value from the pledgor.<sup>46</sup> The pledgee's recovery is subject to liens on the property existing at the time of its pledge.<sup>47</sup>

Where the property is in the possession of a depositary of the pledgee, the pledgee, having no notice of any other rights on the part of the depositary, has been held not to lose any of his rights against such person by modifications in the contract with the pledgee.<sup>48</sup>

b. By Pledgor

The pledgor may maintain an action for the pledged property or its proceeds against a pledgee or third person who has converted it.

In general the pledgee's conversion of the pledged property gives the pledgor a right of action against the pledgee.<sup>49</sup> He may maintain an action for the property itself,<sup>50</sup> or, as in the case of its unauthorized sale or exchange, for the proceeds,<sup>51</sup> or he may bring an action for the amount of damages suffered by him, as considered infra § 40. However, the pledgor is not entitled to recover the property unless he establishes either that it was obtained from him by fraud or that the pledgee has violated the conditions on which it was delivered.<sup>52</sup> The pledgor cannot sue in assumpsit for the pledgee's misuse of the property pledged.<sup>53</sup>

Against third person. The pledgor ordinarily may maintain an action against a third person for the possession of pledged property or its proceeds.<sup>54</sup>

c. By Third Person

The owner of property pledged by another may maintain an action for the property or its proceeds where the property was pledged without his consent or where the pledge, although with his consent, was invalid and illegal.

Assumpsit

(1) Where the property pledged has been sold for value, the pledgor may sue in assumpsit for such value.—May v. Stallings, 16 So.2d 870, 245 Ala. 292.

(2) The amount of value received by the pledgee on the sale of the property pledged is the foundation of the pledgor's claim for recovery in assumpsit.—May v. Stallings, supra.

Pledgee's acquisition of title from third person

If seller agreed to take the property in storage as pledge to protect seller against liability on guaranty to assignee of conditional sales contract, and to give buyer additional time, default of buyer on sales contract would justify assignee's seizure of property, but seller repurchasing from the assignee could not claim that it occupied a new status for purpose of defeating liability to buyer for violation of pledge agreement, and, if buyer was not in default under storage agreement, there was no change in relation occupied by seller and buyer except seller was substituted for assignee as creditor under the sales contract.—May v. Stallings, supra.

The owner of property pledged by another may maintain an action for the property or its proceeds where the property was pledged without his consent,<sup>55</sup> or where the pledge, although made with the owner's consent, was invalid and illegal, under a statute so providing, because the debt secured was usurious.<sup>56</sup>

A conditional vendor who has failed to comply with statutory requirements cannot recover from his vendee's pledgee or persons claiming under the latter.<sup>57</sup>

d. Conditions Precedent

The pledgor ordinarily must tender payment of, or have paid, the debt the pledge was given to secure as a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action against the pledgee, or one holding under him, to recover the property pledged.

The pledgor must tender payment of, or have paid, the debt the pledge was given to secure as a prerequisite to the maintenance of an action against the pledgee to recover the property itself,<sup>58</sup> such as an action in replevin,<sup>59</sup> trover to recover the property,<sup>60</sup> or other possessory action,<sup>61</sup> unless the lien created by the pledge has been otherwise discharged,<sup>62</sup> or there has been such a conversion of the property pledged by the pledgee as renders it impossible for him to return it on payment of the debt,<sup>63</sup> or the pledgee has informed the pledgor, or his successor in interest, that a tender will not be accepted.<sup>64</sup> Also, where the indebtedness secured has not been paid, the pledgor is not entitled to the return of additional collateral pledged to secure the debt, in the absence of an adjudication that the original collateral was sufficient.<sup>65</sup>

Likewise, ordinarily payment or tender of the secured debt is a condition precedent to the pledgor's right to recover the property or its proceeds from a third person<sup>66</sup> unless defendant pleads ownership of the property pledged and denies the pledgor's right to redeem it.<sup>67</sup> However, there is authority to the effect that the pledgor may sue for the property before paying the debt, the pledgee being protected by an order that his claim shall be first paid out of the proceeds thereof.<sup>68</sup> A mere offer to tender is not sufficient.<sup>69</sup> Tender has been held not necessary to the maintenance of an action to recover the proceeds of the property pledged.<sup>70</sup> The pledgee of bonds unlawfully pledged by one not the owner cannot exact payment of their value before surrendering them to the owner.<sup>71</sup>

Where the debt has been paid to the pledgee, the pledgor need not make a tender to a third person in possession of the pledged property.<sup>72</sup>

No demand is necessary unless required by statute before a pledgee may sue a third person in trover for the property.<sup>73</sup>

Subsequent purchaser or claimant. A subsequent purchaser of the property from the pledgor is entitled to recover possession from the pledgee only on payment or tender to the pledgee of the amount of the debt for which it is security.<sup>74</sup>

join as a plaintiff in an action or suit by the pledgee against a third person for recovery of the pledged property or its proceeds.<sup>76</sup> Where his claims conflict with those of the pledgee, the pledgor may file a cross complaint.<sup>77</sup> The validity of a pledge to secure notes cannot be attacked by a suit to which neither the pledgor nor the holders of the notes are parties.<sup>78</sup>

f. Pleading

The usual rules of pleading apply in actions to recover pledged property or its proceeds.

The usual rules of pleading,<sup>79</sup> including those respecting issues, proof, and variance,<sup>80</sup> apply in proceedings to recover pledged property or its proceeds.

g. Evidence

General rules governing the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence, burden of proof, and presumptions apply in proceedings for the possession of pledged property or its proceeds.

The usual rules apply to questions involving admissibility<sup>81</sup> and sufficiency<sup>82</sup> of evidence, and burden of proof<sup>83</sup> and presumptions<sup>84</sup> in proceedings for the possession of pledged property or its proceeds. One sued in replevin has the burden of proving an alleged defense of a preëxisting debt and pledge.<sup>85</sup>

h. Trial

In proceedings for possession of pledged property or its proceeds, questions of fact are for the jury on conflicting evidence, and the general rules governing instructions and findings apply.

On conflicting evidence, questions of fact are for the jury,<sup>86</sup> but in a proper case the court may direct a verdict.<sup>87</sup> Ordinarily it is for the jury to find whether plaintiff complied with his duty under the pledge, and defendant did not live up to his.<sup>88</sup> The usual rules apply to instructions in proceedings for possession of pledged property or its proceeds<sup>89</sup> and also according to judicial deci-

Good faith

When seller rightfully rescinds sale for fraud, burden of proof is on third person to show that he is pledgee from buyer for value without notice; but, where third person shows that he paid fair value for pledge of property from buyer, presumption of good faith arises, placing burden on seller to show that pledgee had knowledge or notice of fraud.—Frisch v. sions on the question, with respect to the findings.<sup>90</sup>

1. Amount and Extent of Recovery

- (1) In general
- (2) In suit by pledgor
- (3) In suit by third person

(1) In General

In an action by a pledgee against the pledgor, or one holding under him, for the possession of the pledged property the pledgee is entitled to a judgment for the return of the goods or payment of the debt; but, in an action against a third person not holding under the pledgor, the pledgee is entitled to judgment for the return of the property pledged or its full value.

In a suit by the pledgee against the pledgor for the latter's retaking of the pledged property, the pledgee is entitled to a judgment for the return of the goods or payment of the debt due.<sup>91</sup> In other words, plaintiff is entitled to recover only the property itself, or the debt it was given to secure, with interest, since this is the measure of the pledgor's liability to him.<sup>92</sup>

Against third person. In an action in trover against a third person, the pledgee ordinarily is entitled to an alternative judgment for the full value of the collaterals, irrespective of the amount for which they were pledged, since this is the measure of his responsibility to the pledgor.<sup>93</sup> However, in an action against a purchaser from the pledgor, the pledgee can recover only the amount of his debt,<sup>94</sup> since this would be the extent of his recovery against the pledgor himself;<sup>95</sup> and, where the pledgee sues on the contract for the purchase price of the goods, the purchaser may set off his loss on a portion of the goods purchased but never delivered.<sup>96</sup>

Income. A pledgee can recover only the income or dividends from pledged property which was received subsequent to the time of the pledge.<sup>97</sup>

(2) In Suit by Pledgor

In an action by the pledgor against the pledgee for the property pledged, the pledgee ordinarily will be given an option to return the property or its value, and if adjudged to pay its value he may deduct the unpaid portion of the loan secured.

In jurisdictions where trover will lie for the recovery of property, on judgment in trover against the pledgee, he will be given an option to return the property itself or its value.<sup>98</sup> Where the action is for the return of the property pledged and it develops that part of the property has in fact been converted, the pledgor is entitled to the return of the pledged property held intact and damages for that converted.<sup>99</sup> A pledgee adjudged to pay the cash value of pledged property in event of failure to return it may deduct from such cash value the amount of the unpaid loan secured.<sup>1</sup> If a pledged note is construed as paid to the pledgee, no matter by what means, he is liable for the face value, whether or not it was legally collectable.<sup>2</sup> In an action in assumpsit against a pledgee who wrongfully sold the property pledged, plaintiff may recover the consideration which went to the pledgee on the sale, either money or money's worth.<sup>3</sup> The pledgor may recover the full sales price from the pledgee even though the latter took a note for the purchase price which he subsequently surrendered for less than its face value.<sup>4</sup>

Interest. Where the property is sold by the pledgee on credit, without interest, and the sale is ratified by the pledgor by his suing for the proceeds, the pledgor is chargeable with interest on his debt not only to the time of the sale, but until the payment of sufficient purchase money to discharge his debt.<sup>5</sup>

Where the property of a number of pledgors has been mingled and converted by the pledgee, the surplus proceeds of such property remaining on the pledgee's insolvency is impressed with a trust for the benefit of the pledgors in proportion to their loss.<sup>6</sup>

Against third person. Where the pledgor has conferred on the pledgee the indicia of ownership of the property, he can recover from a third person who has received it from the pledgee in good faith as collateral for a loan only the value of the property in excess of the loan by defendant to the pledgee.<sup>7</sup> Where the pledgor consents to a sale by one claiming by a transfer from his pledgee, he cannot hold such person responsible for more than the actual amount received although the property is sold for less than it is worth.<sup>8</sup>

Costs. Where plaintiff fails in a suit, the sole purpose of which is to secure possession of the property pledged, he is properly cast for costs.<sup>9</sup>

(3) In Suit by Third Person

The owner of property pledged by another may recover it or its proceeds in an action therefor, where it was pledged without his consent and by one on whom he had not conferred the indicia of ownership; but where he conferred the indicia of ownership on the pledgor his recovery is limited to the excess of the proceeds over the amount for which it was pledged.

The owner of property pledged without his consent by one on whom he had not conferred the indicia of ownership may recover the property itself or the proceeds from the pledgee.<sup>10</sup> However, he cannot defeat the pledge and his recovery is limited to the excess of the proceeds over the amount for which it was pledged where he conferred the indicia of ownership on the pledgor,<sup>11</sup> or, under some statutes, where he has allowed another to assume the apparent ownership of the property for the purpose of making any transfer of it,<sup>12</sup> unless the pledgee had actual or imputed knowledge of the owner's rights and was not an innocent encumbrancer.<sup>13</sup> The pledgee is not, however, entitled to set off sums advanced to the pledgor on the property after notice of its true ownership,<sup>14</sup> or on a negotiable note not belonging to the pledgor and received by him otherwise than in the usual course of business,<sup>15</sup> or to use the property to extinguish an antecedent indebtedness due him from the person making such delivery.<sup>16</sup> In a suit to recover possession of property which has been pledged by another with his consent, the pledgee is not entitled in reconvention to foreclose on his pledge where he has not complied with a statute governing the method of foreclosure on pledged property.<sup>17</sup> These rules apply with equal force in favor of bona fide purchasers from the true owner.<sup>18</sup>

A pledgee may maintain an action against the pledgor or a third person to recover damages for the conversion or wrongful injury of the pledged property.

The pledgee may recover by an action in trover,<sup>19</sup> or the statutory substitute therefor,<sup>20</sup> for the pledgor's conversion of the pledged property, and this although the pledged property may have come into the pledgor's hands by the pledgee's consent,<sup>21</sup> as where the pledgee has delivered the property to the pledgor for a special purpose.<sup>22</sup>

Against third person. The pledgee has such an interest or property in the pledged property as en-

Where holder of deposit certificate indorsed it to defendant bank, which obtained proceeds thereof from issuing bank and subsequently issued other certificates in lieu thereof, third person claiming ownership of such certificates on theory that he was beneficiary of surety bond to which original certificate was pledged was held not entitled to recover against defendant bank regardless of whether or not defendant was holder of original certificate in due course.—Seaboard Surety Corporation of America v. ables him to maintain an action for the conversion of,<sup>23</sup> or wrongful injury to,<sup>24</sup> it by a third person, and even though it is taken under an attachment regular on its face.<sup>25</sup> Such an action may be maintained against one who returns the pledged property, without authority, to the pledgor,<sup>26</sup> or against one who causes or induces the pledgor to convert the pledged property.<sup>27</sup> A production credit association to which a tenant pledged his crop has been held entitled to bring a personal action against the landlord for breach of his agreement not to interfere with the association's lien, and is not restricted to an hypothecary action against that portion of the crop produced which was delivered to the landlord by the tenant and disposed of in breach of the agreement.<sup>28</sup>

b. By Pledgor

The pledgor may maintain an action against the pledgee or a third person for damages for conversion of the pledged property.

On a conversion of the property by the pledgee, the pledgor, instead of suing for the property itself or its proceeds, as considered supra § 39, may maintain an action at law for damages<sup>29</sup> for breach of the contract to keep the property safely and restore it to the pledgor on payment of the debt,<sup>30</sup> or an action on the case,<sup>31</sup> or he may plead such conversion as a set-off to a suit on the original debt by the pledgee or his representative, as considered infra § 55. The pledgor may recover for the pledgee's misuse of the property pledged by an action or count in case.<sup>32</sup> A pledgor may maintain an action for damages against a pledgee for violation of special contractual rights.<sup>33</sup>

In the absence of loss, the pledgor cannot recover damages for conversion.<sup>34</sup>

Partial conversion. If the conversion of a part of the property pledged has damaged the pledgor so that the whole may not be used with the same degree of efficiency or dominion as previously, and such change is due to the acts of the pledgee, the pledgor should be compensated for the detriment suffered.<sup>35</sup>

Conversion of several things. The pledgor ordinarily should bring one action for conversion of several different things pledged under one contract.<sup>36</sup>

Title and possession. If a pledgor's equitable or other rights have been injured or destroyed by a person in possession as pledgee, in violation of the terms of the pledge agreement, he may sue in case,<sup>37</sup> but in order for a pledgor to be able to maintain an action in trover for conversion of the

Basic character of proceeding

A suit for conversion of pledged property by pledgee is basically an equitable proceeding designed to award pledgor and pledgee all that is fair and just.—Horn v. Klatt, 151 P. 2d 149, 65 Cal.App.2d 510.

Time cause of action accrues

A pledgor's cause of action for conversion of pledged securities by alleged illegal sale accrued on date that pledgee divested itself of possession and control of securities, and pledgor could not by subsequent demand create new cause of action for conversion accruing on day of such demand.—Jones v. National Chautauqua County Bank of Jamestown, 74 N.Y.S.2d 498, 272 App.Div. 521.

pledged property he must have and retain the legal title, general or special, to the property pledged.<sup>38</sup> Also the present right to possession is an essential element of a suit for conversion<sup>39</sup> unless the pledgee has become unable to return the pledged property.<sup>40</sup> Thus a purchaser of property on a conditional sale who pledges it to the seller cannot sue in trover either for its misuse or wrongful sale.<sup>41</sup>

Against third person. The pledgor, as general owner of the property, may maintain an action for damages against a third person for its injury or conversion.<sup>42</sup> However, the pledgor, not being entitled to the possession of the property, cannot maintain trespass for taking it from the possession of the pledgee<sup>43</sup> except with the latter's consent.<sup>44</sup> The pledgor may recover damages against a third person by reason of whose breach of contract to pay the pledgor's debt to the pledgee the collateral has been forfeited.<sup>45</sup>

Where the pledgee has surrendered a note to the maker for less than its full value, in addition to the pledgor's remedy against the pledgee for conversion, he may also recover from the maker the balance on the note.<sup>46</sup>

c. By Third Person

A subsequent purchaser of pledged property from the pledgor may maintain an action for its conversion.

A subsequent purchaser of the property from the pledgor may maintain an action for its conversion.<sup>47</sup> One to whom the goods have been delivered by the pledgee, with the consent of the pledgor, may maintain an action for their conversion.<sup>48</sup>

Maker of pledged note. Where the pledgee has wrongfully transferred a note pledged to him, he will be liable to the maker, on the payment or tender of his debt, for the amount the maker was obliged to pay to the holder of the note.<sup>49</sup>

Prior lienor. Any liens existing on the property at the time of its pledge may be enforced against the pledgee.<sup>50</sup>

d. Conditions Precedent

As a general rule a tender of the amount due on the debt secured by the pledge or a demand for the return of the pledged property is not required as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action for damages for conversion of the pledged property.

Tender of the amount of the principal debt has been held not necessary to the maintenance of an action for conversion of the property pledged,<sup>51</sup> especially where the pledgee has indicated that he will not return the property in any event<sup>52</sup> or is unable to do so because he no longer has possession thereof.<sup>53</sup> However, tender may be required where the property remains in the possession of the pledgee,<sup>54</sup> and tender has been held necessary to support an action for conversion where plaintiff has never had possession of the pledged property.<sup>55</sup> Tender into court of the amount due is proper, although not necessary, in a trover action by the pledgor to recover the property pledged.<sup>56</sup> The pledgor may sue a third person without previous

Reason for rule

If his action is successful in actually obtaining the property or its value, under an alternative verdict, or its value after judgment on a tender of the debt.<sup>57</sup> An owner of property who permitted another to pledge it has been held not required to tender payment of the debt secured in order to maintain an action for the conversion of the property by its wrongful sale, particularly where it appears that the pledgor had pledged other property of his own of sufficient value to discharge the debt.<sup>58</sup>

The pledgor may sue the pledgee for damages for conversion without first demanding a return of the pledged property.<sup>59</sup> It has been held that a demand for the return of the property pledged unaccompanied by a legal tender of amount due is insufficient to support an action for conversion.<sup>60</sup> In order to maintain trover against a pledgee, the agreement must be such that the property is to be kept in its original form as the identical property of the owner.<sup>61</sup>

e. Defenses; Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counterclaim

In an action for damages for conversion of pledged property, a tender back of the property is not a defense, but the plaintiff's waiver or ratification of the wrongful act may constitute a defense; and the defendant, in a proper case, may recoup or set off an indebtedness due from the plaintiff to him.

A tender back of the property by the wrongdoer is not a bar to an action to recover damages for its conversion.<sup>62</sup> However, where the pledgee had previously offered to return the property, but the pledgor refused to pay the debt, he cannot in his action against the pledgee complain that pledgee could not have delivered the property if he had paid.<sup>63</sup> A waiver<sup>64</sup> or ratification<sup>65</sup> of the wrongful act by the pledgor may constitute a defense. The pledgor is not estopped to recover damages against his pledgee for a wrongful sale of the property by the fact that he has purchased the property from the pledgee's vendee.<sup>66</sup> It is no defense to an action by the pledgee against the pledgor for the pledgor's conversion of the property pledged that the pledgee wrongfully sold other securities which he held for the same debt.<sup>67</sup>

Laches. The equitable doctrine of laches has been held not applicable to an action at law for conversion of pledged property.<sup>68</sup>

Recoupment, set-off, and counterclaim. Under rules applicable to the propriety of a set-off or counterclaim generally, one sued for a conversion of pledged property may set off or recoup an indebtedness due from plaintiff to him.<sup>69</sup> Generally the pledgee is entitled to recoup, or have set off, the amount of the debt secured against the amount of damages recovered;<sup>70</sup> and this rule has been apreplevy bond given by defendant in a bail proceeding, the right of defendant to be reimbursed to the extent of his money loss, if he has not already received the amount of his debt, may be conserved.—Evans v. Odum, supra.

Provident Sav. Bank & Trust Co. of Cincinnati*, 23 N.Y.S.2d 637, affirmed 31 N.Y.S.2d 664, 263 App.Div. 703, appeal denied 32 N.Y.S.2d 129, 263 App.Div. 809.

plied in an action by one who pledged his property for the debt of another, so as to permit the pledgee to recoup the amount of the principal debt, not exceeding the value of the property pledged,<sup>71</sup> although it has also been held that in such an action the pledgee may not recoup the debt due him, where the pledge was discharged, prior to its conversion, by the owner's valid tender of the amount due on the principal debt.<sup>72</sup> In an action by the pledgor against the pledgee for conversion of the property, the latter is entitled to set off damages sustained by him by reason of the pledgor's breach of the contract the pledge was given to secure;<sup>73</sup> but he cannot show, in an action against him for surrendering notes to the maker for less than their face value, that the pledgor was indebted to the maker of the notes in an amount greater than the pledgor's loss.<sup>74</sup>

f. Pleading

General rules of pleading, particularly those applicable to actions for conversion, apply in actions for damages for conversion of pledged property.

General rules of pleading, more particularly those applicable to actions for conversion, apply respecting pleadings in actions for damages for conversion brought by the pledgor against the pledgee<sup>75</sup> or against a third person,<sup>76</sup> or by the pledgee against the pledgor<sup>77</sup> or a third person,<sup>78</sup> or by a third person against the pledgee.<sup>79</sup> The pledgee's complaint in an action for conversion must allege the amount due on the secured debt.<sup>80</sup> Where the gist of the action is conversion, and the proof fails to show conversion, a nonsuit is proper.<sup>81</sup> It is proper to exclude evidence not conforming to the issues as raised by the pleadings,<sup>82</sup> but evidence pertinent and relevant thereto is admissible.<sup>83</sup> Where a written contract is not pleaded but appears for the first time in the evidence, evidence of fraud, mistake, or undue influence may be admitted without having been pleaded.<sup>84</sup>

g. Evidence

In an action for damages for conversion of pledged property, the burden of proof rests on a pledgor suing for conversion to establish the pledge, the conversion, and the fact and extent of his loss; and the general rules respecting the admissibility and the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply.

The burden of proof rests on a plaintiff suing for conversion to establish the pledge,<sup>85</sup> and to allege and prove not only the conversion, but the fact and extent of his loss.<sup>86</sup> On his failure to prove the

Issues

(1) Where complaint alleged that transaction was both a sale of security with option to repurchase and a pledge, and asked for damages for breach of contract and for conversion, and evidence disclosed and answer admitted that transaction constituted pledge, only issue was whether pledgee had converted property.—Beatty v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 41 P.2d 378, 4 Cal. App.2d 692.

(2) In action for alleged wrongful conversion of securities deposited as collateral for a loan, question of ratification did not arise where no relation of principal and agent was pleaded or proved.—Heimpel v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Bethlehem, 12 A.2d 28, 337 Pa. 425.

Proof

In action of trover for conversion of property pledged, defendant has right to rely on lack of proof of possessory right in plaintiff notwithstanding there is no evidence to show that defendant as pledgee took required statutory action to sell the property and terminate plaintiff's actual value of the securities converted it will be presumed that they were of no value or of only a nominal value, and the pledgor will not be entitled to a judgment,<sup>87</sup> or he will be entitled to a judgment for only a nominal amount.<sup>88</sup>

Admissibility. General rules respecting the admissibility of evidence apply in actions for damages for conversion.<sup>89</sup> In the event of a special contract by the parties governing their rights, evidence of a custom or usage in conflict therewith is inadmissible, since the effect of such evidence would be to vary the express terms of the agreement.<sup>90</sup> Where the pledgee is sued for conversion of a note and is primarily liable for its face value and interest, as considered infra § 41 b (3), he may introduce evidence to show that the actual value of the note was less than its face value.<sup>91</sup>

Sufficiency. General rules apply respecting the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions for damages for conversion brought by the pledgor against the pledgee<sup>92</sup> or against a third person,<sup>93</sup> or by the pledgee against the pledgor<sup>94</sup> or a third person,<sup>95</sup> or by a third person against the pledgee.<sup>96</sup>

h. Trial and Judgment

In actions for damages for conversion of pledged property, questions of fact are for the jury on conflicting evidence or where the evidence will admit of different reasonable inferences; rules of general application apply with respect to instructions, and the judgment should be molded so as to conform to the case made and protect all parties concerned.

In actions for damages for conversion of pledged property, questions of fact are for the jury on conflicting evidence<sup>97</sup> or where the evidence will admit of different reasonable inferences;<sup>98</sup> and if there is evidence to prove an issue it should be submitted to the jury.<sup>99</sup> A conversion of a part of the pledged property is not a conversion of the whole as a matter of law, but the question is to be determined by the facts of each case.<sup>1</sup> General rules apply with respect to instructions.<sup>2</sup> The court may mold its judgment so as to protect all parties concerned.<sup>3</sup> Where a pledgor sues only for damages for conversion, he is not entitled to judgment for the property itself.<sup>4</sup> The court cannot compel the pledgor to take back his property in an action by him for conversion,<sup>5</sup> and he cannot recover the property.<sup>6</sup> The effect of the satisfaction by the wrongdoer of the judgment in trover is to vest in him title to the property or its proceeds.<sup>7</sup>

§ 41. — Elements and Measure of Damages

- a. In general
- b. In actions by pledgor
- c. In actions by third person

a. In General

In a pledgee's action for damages for conversion of the pledged property, the measure of damages is that which will fully compensate him for the detriment sustained.

In a pledgee's action for damages for conversion of the pledged property, his recovery is limited to a sum which will fully compensate him for the detriment sustained.<sup>8</sup> Where the action is against the pledgor for conversion, the measure of damages is the amount of the debt with interest where the value of the property exceeds the debt,<sup>9</sup> and the value of the property with interest where it is less than the amount of the debt.<sup>10</sup> Subject to the rule that the pledgee cannot recover more than the amount of his debt with interest,<sup>11</sup> it has been stated that plaintiff may, at his option, take the value at the time of conversion or the highest value between the conversion and the trial.<sup>12</sup>

Against third person. In an action for damages instituted by the pledgee against a third person for injury to, or conversion of, the property which has been pledged to him, he is not limited to recovery for his interest only, but may recover the total amount of the loss, which in a case of the conversion of the property is the actual value of the property at the time of the conversion.<sup>13</sup> However, as against anyone claiming through,<sup>14</sup> or in privity with,<sup>15</sup> the pledgor, the pledgee is entitled to recover only the amount of his debt, or, if his debt is greater than the value of the property, such value, with interest to date of judgment.<sup>16</sup>

Where the conversion is by an officer acting under a writ of attachment or execution against the pledgor legal and regular in all respects, such officer occupies the same position as the pledgor, and is liable to the pledgee only to the same extent;<sup>17</sup> but if the attachment or execution is improperly issued, or is otherwise illegal, the officer is liable for the full value of the goods,<sup>18</sup> which will be their market value at the time of the conversion,<sup>19</sup> and not the price for which they were sold by the officer.<sup>20</sup>

b. In Actions by Pledgor

- (1) In general
- (2) Property of fluctuating value
- (3) Particular property
- (4) Interest

(1) In General

In an action by the pledgor for damages for conversion of the property pledged, the measure of damages is the actual loss sustained, which, in an action against the pledgee ordinarily is the value of the property pledged less the amount of the unpaid secured debt, and in an action against a third person is the full value of the pledged property less any of the indebtedness paid by the defendant to the pledgee.

The measure of damages which the pledgor is entitled to recover against the pledgee for conversion of the property is the actual amount of loss suffered by the pledgor by reason of the pledgee's wrongful act.<sup>21</sup> Ordinarily this is the value of the pledged property at the time of conversion,<sup>22</sup> or its market value at such time,<sup>23</sup> with interest, as considered infra subdivision b (4) of this section, less the amount of the unpaid secured debt.<sup>24</sup> In the cases where it has been held that the pledgor must tender payment of his debt before he is entitled to demand a return of the property or maintain a suit for its conversion, it has been held that the measure of his damages is the value of the property at the time of such tender and demand,<sup>25</sup> and not its value at the time of conversion.<sup>26</sup>

If the pledgor is not the absolute owner of the property, he should introduce evidence to show the extent and value of his interest.<sup>27</sup>

Action in contract. Where the pledgor waives the tort and sues the pledgee in breach of contract for the wrongful sale of pledged property, his damages are the proceeds of the sale.<sup>28</sup> Where a pledgee, having an option to purchase the property pledged at a specified price, converts the property, the pledgor may elect to consider the conversion as an exercise of the option, and sue for the price.<sup>29</sup>

Motive. It has been held that the motive of the pledgee in converting the property pledged may be taken into consideration in assessing damages.<sup>30</sup>

Punitive damages. Punitive damages may be recovered for a fraudulent conversion of pledged property.<sup>31</sup> The failure to make the pledgor a party to foreclosure proceedings affecting the pledged property does not entitle him to punitive damages.<sup>32</sup>

Misuse. The pledgor's recovery for the pledgee's misuse of the property pledged is limited to the damage thereby caused.<sup>33</sup>

Against third person. In an action by the pledgor against a third person for conversion, he may recover the full value of the collateral<sup>34</sup> less any of his indebtedness paid by defendant to the pledgee.<sup>35</sup> Statutory provisions basing the amount of damages for conversion on the highest value of the property within a reasonable time after notice of conversion do not apply to one who acquired the pledged property from the pledgee for value and without notice of the pledgor's interest therein.<sup>36</sup>

(2) Property of Fluctuating Value

In an action for damages for conversion of pledged property of fluctuating value, the measure of damages has been variously held to be the highest proved value between the date of conversion and that of trial, the

Special contract

The measure of damages for a pledgee's violation of a pledgor's contractual rights, in that he refused to coöperate with the pledgor in withdrawing pledged mortgage bonds from the control of a reorganization committee, as a result of which the pledgor lost the right to his bonds and was required to accept new bonds, is the difference between the value of the new bonds and the amount which would have been received from the proceeds of the mortgaged property had the bonds not been exchanged.—Francis v. ### Credit of amount on debt by pledgee

Where pledgee of negotiable bonds delivered bonds to defendant as collateral for indebtedness to defendant who was purchaser for value without notice, defendant's sale of bonds for pledgee's debt did not require defendant to account to pledgor, where pledgee credited pledgor's account with market value of bonds.—Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Co. for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, 185 A. 292, 322 Pa. 344.

36. Pa.—Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Co. for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, supra.

Held purchaser for value without notice

Company which accepted coupon bonds, payable to bearer, as collateral for debt of trust company without knowledge that trust company held bonds as pledgee, was held purchaser for value without notice, as regards company's liability to pledgor for sale of bonds for pledgee's debt.—Wolfe v. Pennsylvania Co. for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, supra.

highest market price within a reasonable time after notice of conversion, or the highest market value between the date of conversion and the date of filing suit, subject, in any event in an action by the pledgor against the pledgee, to a deduction of the amount unpaid on the debt secured.

In the case of property of fluctuating value, the pledgor suing in trover may, according to some authorities, recover the highest proved value between the date of conversion and that of trial,<sup>37</sup> or, according to others, the highest market price within a reasonable time after notice of conversion,<sup>38</sup> or, under a third view, the highest market value between the date of conversion and the date of filing suit,<sup>39</sup> subject, in any event, to deduction of whatever he owed the pledgee on the secured debt.<sup>40</sup>

Pledgor's recoupment for conversion. There is authority to the effect that a pledgor seeking recoupment for conversion, in an action by the pledgee to collect the secured debt, is entitled merely to the value of the property at time of conversion,<sup>41</sup> and not to the highest value between the date of conversion and trial.<sup>42</sup> Other authority holds that it lies with the jury to determine which measure of damages shall be applied.<sup>43</sup>

For breach of a special contract not to sell before a specified date, the pledgor may recover the value of the property up to the date of permissible sale<sup>44</sup> or may recoup such value as damages in an action by the pledgee to collect the secured debt.<sup>45</sup>

(3) Particular Property

The measure of damages in an action for the conversion of a pledged note, bond, or mortgage is its actual value at the time of conversion, which prima facie is its face value; the measure of damages for the conversion of an insurance policy is prima facie the face value of the policy, less any premiums accrued on the death of the insured.

On the conversion of a note or bond pledged as collateral, the pledgee is liable to the owner for its actual value at the time of such conversion.<sup>46</sup> Prima facie its value is its face value and interest,<sup>47</sup> although, as appears supra § 40 g, the pledgee will be allowed to introduce evidence to prove that its actual value was less than its face value; but where no evidence is introduced tending to invalidate the note or bond or reduce its value the prima facie case becomes absolute.<sup>48</sup> Ordinarily its value is not the value alone of property given to secure it,<sup>49</sup> but, in the case of notes worthless when converted, damages may be measured by the value of property securing such notes.<sup>50</sup>

Mortgages. The measure of damages for the conversion of a mortgage by the pledgee is prima facie the amount for which the mortgage is security,<sup>51</sup> and not the value of the mortgaged property.<sup>52</sup> However, the value of the mortgaged premises may be a proper matter of consideration in determining the value of the converted collateral.<sup>53</sup>

Insurance policies. On the wrongful surrender of a policy of insurance by the pledgee before the death of insured, the measure of damages is the face value of the policy,<sup>54</sup> less any premiums accrued on the death of insured.<sup>55</sup>

Diligence to replace property converted required

A pledgor suing for conversion of pledged fluctuating securities by pledgee must use diligence to keep down his loss and if, within reasonable time after knowing of conversion, pledgee can replace securities for the same price or a less price he has suffered no actionable loss.—Jones v. National Chautauqua County Bank of Jamestown, 74 N.Y.S.2d 498, 272 App.Div. 521.

(4) Interest

In an action for damages for conversion of the property pledged, the pledgor ordinarily is entitled to interest from the date of conversion on the amount due him as of that date, that is, on the difference between the value of the property converted and the amount of the debt secured.

The pledgor ordinarily is entitled to interest from the date of conversion<sup>56</sup> on the sum due him as of such date.<sup>57</sup> In other words, interest ordinarily is computed on the difference between the value of the property converted and the amount of the debt secured.<sup>58</sup>

Usurious interest actually collected by a pledgee cannot be recovered by a pledgor.<sup>59</sup>

c. In Actions by Third Person

The measure of damages in an action by a third person for conversion of pledged property is the actual loss sustained.

A third person entitled to sue for conversion of pledged property may recover damages measured by his actual loss.<sup>60</sup> Where the pledged property is sold by the pledgee, the value is to be fixed as of the time of the sale.<sup>61</sup>

§ 42. Equitable Proceedings

b. Accounting

a. In General

Under circumstances admitting equitable jurisdiction, a pledgor or pledgee may maintain a suit in equity to recover pledged property or its value.

Under circumstances admitting equitable jurisdiction, the pledgor may maintain a suit in equity against the pledgee<sup>62</sup> or a third person<sup>63</sup> for the recovery of pledged property wrongfully withheld or other appropriate relief, or for its proceeds.<sup>64</sup> Also, the pledgor may sue in equity to have the value of property converted by pledgee credited on the principal debt.<sup>65</sup> On the other hand, the pledgee may bring a suit in equity to recover the property from the pledgor<sup>66</sup> or from a third person<sup>67</sup> who has wrongfully taken it from him, or to secure the proceeds of the property if it has been transferred by defendant.<sup>68</sup> In equitable proceedings the rights of a pledgor as well as the rights of a pledgee must be tested by principles of equity.<sup>69</sup>

On a bill for discovery a decree may be entered against pledgee without sending plaintiff to law.<sup>70</sup>

b. Accounting

A pledgor may sue the pledgee for an accounting where there has been a conversion.

There is authority to the effect that the pledgor may sue the pledgee for an accounting where it appears that there has been a conversion.<sup>72</sup> A pledgee already in default is not entitled to a demand before being sued for an accounting.<sup>73</sup>

Negotiable bonds

(1) Under law of New York, the face value of a corporate bond is the prima facie measure of damages for its conversion, with respect to pledgee.—Land Oberoesterreich v. Gude, C.C.A.N.Y., 109 F.2d 635, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 30, 311 U.S. 670, 85 L.Ed. 431.

(2) In a former opinion, however, it was held that the measure of damages was the market value of the bonds rather than the face value.

—Land Oberoesterreich v. Gude, C.C.A.N.Y., 86 F.2d 621, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 493, 300 U.S. 663, 81 L.Ed. 871.

V. TRANSFER OF DEBT OR PLEDGE

§ 43. Assignment of Debt or Pledge

- a. In general
- b. Transfer of debt secured
- c. Transfer of pledge without transfer of debt
- d. Repledge by pledgee

a. In General

In the absence of an agreement or statute to the contrary, as a general rule a pledgee may transfer or assign his interest under the contract of pledge.

In the absence of an agreement or statute to the contrary,<sup>77</sup> as a general rule the pledgee<sup>78</sup> or his personal representative<sup>79</sup> may transfer or assign his interest under the contract, whether or not the principal debt is negotiable.<sup>80</sup> So, in the absence of an agreement or statute to the contrary,<sup>81</sup> the pledgee may sell or assign the principal debt and transfer the collateral to the purchaser<sup>82</sup> if nothing is done to deprive the pledgor of the right to redeem on payment of the amount due on the principal debt;<sup>83</sup> and this right is not curtailed by a statute relating merely to the procedure to be followed in enforcing a pledge.<sup>84</sup>

The pledgee of a note may make a valid assignment of it to another simply for collection,<sup>85</sup> but the pledgee's assignment of a pledged note to a trustee for collection constitutes a complete relinquishment of the note as collateral for future advances.<sup>86</sup>

Method of assignment. An assignment of the pledgee's interest may be effected without a formal assignment,<sup>87</sup> and may be by a delivery of the collateral to the assignee.<sup>88</sup> The pledgee may assign his interest without first demanding payment of the pledgor<sup>89</sup> or notifying him that the assignment is to be made.<sup>90</sup>

Conversion by assignee. Where the debt secured is evidenced by a negotiable instrument, if the assignee converts the collateral to his own use, the original pledgee will not be liable to the pledgor for such conversion.<sup>91</sup>

b. Transfer of Debt Secured

Usually, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the pledgee's transfer of the secured debt carries with it a transfer of the collateral.

While the view has been expressed that no lien or right of property in the property pledged passes to the assignee of the debt unless the assignment is accompanied by a delivery of such property, actual or constructive,<sup>92</sup> since the pledge is regarded as collateral to the principal obligation, as discussed supra §§ 1, 2, usually, unless the parties agree otherwise,<sup>93</sup> the pledgee's transfer of the secured debt

92. Tenn.—Johnson v. Smith, 11 Humphr. 396.

93. Ill.—Corpus Juris quoted in Painter v. Merchants & Manufaccarries with it a transfer of the collateral,<sup>94</sup> notwithstanding the collateral is not actually delivered to the transferee,<sup>95</sup> and notwithstanding the rule stated and discussed generally infra §§ 47, 48, that, on satisfaction or payment of the secured debt, the collateral pledged should be returned to the pledgor.<sup>96</sup>

On an assignment of the principal obligation without the pledge, generally the assignor holds the collateral as trustee or agent for his assignee,<sup>97</sup> even though the assignee takes a renewal of the principal obligation in his own name,<sup>98</sup> and payments received by the assignor on the collateral will be held for the use of the assignee.<sup>99</sup> So, where the pledgee assigns the debt to one person and the collateral to another, the latter, under some circumstances, holds the collateral in trust for the assignee of the debt.<sup>1</sup> Where, however, it is the evident intention of the parties in the delivery of collateral that it shall be held for the personal security of the pledgee, on an assignment by the pledgee of his debt, without the collateral, the collateral becomes the property of the pledgor freed from the lien.<sup>2</sup>

c. Transfer of Pledge without Transfer of Debt

Generally speaking, the pledgee may not make a valid assignment of the collateral separate from the debt secured so as to confer rights on the assignee as against the pledgor.

Generally speaking, the pledgee, having merely a special property in the pledge as security for his debt, cannot make a valid assignment of the collateral separate from the debt so as to confer any rights on the assignee as against the pledgor,<sup>3</sup> and

Transfer of note

(1) Assignment or transfer of a note evidencing an indebtedness generally carries with it the collateral pledged as security.

(2) A person who had lent bonds owned by him to the original pledgor for the purpose of having them pledged to secure the debt of such pledgor and who had taken an as-ignment of the note of the original pledgee from a subpledgee, to whom the original pledgee had pledged the bonds, could not separate such note from the bonds as collateral by assigning such note and retaining the bonds.—Kreider v. California Thorn Cordage, 16 P.2d 1002, 128 Cal.App. 262.

(3) Transfer of note as carrying rights in collaterals generally see Bills and Notes § 203.

Right to possession

Normally, if the pledgee assigns the debt, the assignee is entitled to possession of the collateral.—Weinress v. Bland, Del.Ch., 71 A.2d 59.

Pledged property in possession of third person

(1) An assignment of a debt secured by pledged property in possession of third person operates as a transfer to assignee of all the pledgee's rights.—Schram v. Sage, D.C.Mich., 46 F.Supp. 381, petition overruled 47 F.Supp. 94.

this rule has been embodied in some statutory provisions.<sup>4</sup>

A gift of the pledged property by the pledgee to a third person does not pass the pledgee's interest in the secured debt.<sup>5</sup>

An assignment for collection may be made without transfer of the secured debt.<sup>6</sup>

d. Repledge by Pledgee

Under certain circumstances the pledgee may repledge property delivered to him as security.

It has been held or recognized that ordinarily the pledgee has the right to repledge property delivered to him as security<sup>7</sup> without obtaining the consent of the pledgor,<sup>8</sup> provided the repledge is not for a sum greater than the original secured debt<sup>9</sup> and provided the original pledgor may repossess himself of the property on payment of his debt.<sup>10</sup> Unless authorized by a special agreement, the pledgee has no right, as against the pledgor, to repledge the property for a greater amount than that for which it is held as security.<sup>11</sup>

It has been held that a pledgee who has acquired possession of the chattel involved from the pledgor by fraud does not have such title as to authorize the pledgee to repledge the chattel to a third person<sup>12</sup> and that such attempted repledge is invalid.<sup>13</sup>

Rights of the subpledgee are discussed infra § 44 b.

Under agreement of the parties, the pledgee may have the power to repledge collateral to secure the pledgee's own indebtedness<sup>14</sup> and to repledge for an amount greater than the original secured debt.<sup>15</sup> Conversely, where the contract of pledge forbids repledge for more than the original indebtedness, the pledgee has no right so to repledge.<sup>16</sup> The power to repledge under an agreement will in the last analysis depend on the terms and construction of the particular agreement involved.<sup>17</sup>

Right to possession. Under an authorized repledge, the pledgee does not lose his right to possession as against the pledgor.<sup>18</sup>

§ 44. Rights of Purchaser from Pledgee

- a. In general
- b. Rights of subpledgee

a. In General

In general, on an effective transfer by the pledgee to a third person of the pledgee's interest with respect to the pledge, the transferee steps into the shoes of the pledgee, and is entitled to the same rights, and has the same obligations, with respect to the pledge, as those of the pledgee.

Subject to certain qualifications and limitations, it is a general rule that on an assignment by the pledgee of his interest in the pledge,<sup>19</sup> or on a sale thereof absolute in form,<sup>20</sup> such assignee or purchaser steps into the shoes of the original pledgee; usually the transferee is entitled to the same rights and benefits with respect to the pledge as was the pledgee,<sup>21</sup> and need not surrender the property to the pledgor except on payment or tender of the debt for which it was originally pledged.<sup>22</sup> Conversely, subject to exceptions with respect to the pledge of negotiable instruments as collateral, hereinafter discussed, the transferee ordinarily acquires only the rights possessed by the pledgee,<sup>23</sup> and is charged with the same duty or obligations with respect to the pledge as was the pledgee.<sup>24</sup> These rules apply with respect to pledged chattels<sup>25</sup> or nonnegotiable securities,<sup>26</sup> and irrespective of whether the transfer is to a third person with notice of the pledgor's rights<sup>27</sup> or without such notice.<sup>28</sup> If the purchaser has notice that the sale is fraudulent on the part of the pledgee, he acquires no right whatever as against the pledgor.<sup>29</sup> The view has been taken that a pledgee who has acquired possession of the chattel involved from the pledgor by fraud does not have such special property in, or right of possession of, such chattel which the pledgee may transfer to a third person,<sup>30</sup> even though the purported transferee acts in good faith and with reasonable care.<sup>31</sup>

without recourse and without delivery of the collateral, the pledgee makes an exchange of collateral with the pledgor without the authorization of the assignee, it has been held that the assignee may enforce the principal obligation against the pledgor,<sup>32</sup> without returning or accounting for the collateral.<sup>33</sup>

Where the pledgee sells collateral to a third person with the consent of the pledgor, there is no trust relation between the pledgee and the purchaser.<sup>34</sup>

Negotiable instruments. If the collateral security is itself a negotiable instrument, the transfer of the collateral to a bona fide purchaser for value may vest in such purchaser a valid legal title, without any liability to the pledgor.<sup>35</sup> So, where collateral is pledged to secure the payment of a negotiable instrument, if the collateral is transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value, under some circumstances the purchaser may acquire title free from the claim of the pledgor,<sup>36</sup> and, in such case, on the transfer of the principal obligation and the collateral to such a purchaser, the purchaser takes free from equities between the pledgor and the pledgee affecting the right to enforce the collateral.<sup>37</sup> If,

Agreement as to effectiveness of collateral

If assignee, at time note and collateral were delivered to him, had no knowledge of agreement between maker and original payee that deed

however, the transferee is not a bona fide holder for value, he takes subject to the pledgor's equities.<sup>38</sup> One with notice, buying from a purchaser without notice, acquires the rights of the latter.<sup>39</sup>

In action by pledgee against purchaser from him for price of pledged property, the purchaser is not entitled to inquire into the amount due the pledgee on the original obligation.<sup>40</sup>

b. Rights of Subpledgee

Apart from questions as to the status of a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable instrument, as a general rule a person with whom a pledgee has repledged the property pledged takes only the title of his transferor and may not hold the property for an amount in excess of the original debt unless greater rights exist by virtue of due authorization or estoppel.

Generally the subpledgee, unless he occupies the favored position of a bona fide purchaser for value of a negotiable instrument,<sup>41</sup> takes only the title of his transferor,<sup>42</sup> but is entitled to hold the property until the debt of the original owner has been discharged.<sup>43</sup> Where the subpledgee holds under an unauthorized repledge for an amount in excess of the debt due to the original pledgee from the original pledgor, the subpledgee must deliver up the property or its proceeds to the original pledgor on the payment of the original debt it was delivered to secure.<sup>44</sup> One claiming as subpledgee under a void assignment acquires no rights.<sup>45</sup> A subpledgee holding under an authorized repledge may be entitled to retain the collateral until his debt is paid,<sup>46</sup> the original pledgor being obliged to pay the amount of the subpledge in order to regain possession of the property.<sup>47</sup> It has been held that, under some circumstances, a repledge of collateral carries with it the pledgee's rights in the original debt.<sup>48</sup>

The subpledgee ordinarily is chargeable with notice of the extent of authority of the original pledgee to repledge,<sup>49</sup> but, according to some authorities, the subpledgee is not necessarily chargeable with notice of the pledgee's deliberate bad faith toward his pledgor,<sup>50</sup> although it has been held that a subpledgee does not acquire any right in a chattel involved as against the original pledgor where the original pledgee acquired such chattel from the original pledgor by fraud, even though the subpledgee has acted in good faith and with reasonable care.<sup>51</sup>

Estoppel to deny pledgee's authority to repledge. The pledgor may be estopped with respect to a subpledgee to deny the pledgee's authority to repledge the property,<sup>52</sup> as where he has conferred the indicia of ownership on the pledgee.<sup>53</sup> Under such circumstances, the original pledgor may still require that the subpledgee shall first apply to the satisfaction of the pledgee's debt to the subpledgee other collateral transferred to the subpledgee by the pledgee,<sup>54</sup> but, where the original pledgor has received payment in full from the pledgee for the property converted by him, he has no further right against the assignee.<sup>55</sup> interest in the pledged property<sup>56</sup> without delivery of the property to the purchaser or assignee.<sup>57</sup> The assignment of the pledgor's interest in the pledged property to a third person may be effective as a junior pledge,<sup>58</sup> and, after the discharge of the pledge, the pledgor may repledge the collateral.<sup>59</sup> Where the payee of a note payable in installments has pledged some of the installments to secure his debt, his assignment of the unpledged installments may be valid as to him.<sup>60</sup>

A transfer of the pledgor's interest ordinarily is subject to the rights of the pledgee.<sup>61</sup> Thus, despite such a transfer, the pledgee usually retains the right to compromise a suit to collect the collateral without the consent of the pledgor's transferee,<sup>62</sup> to sell the collateral in accordance with the terms of the pledge,<sup>63</sup> or to have possession of the pledged property.<sup>64</sup> The pledgee will be protected as to advances against the collateral made after transfer of the pledgor's interest but before notice thereof.<sup>65</sup>

b. Rights of Pledgor's Transferee

As a general rule, the assignee of the pledgor's interest in the property pledged acquires all the pledgor's rights in such property, at least where the pledgee has notice of the assignment.

As a general rule, the assignee of the pledgor's interest succeeds to all the pledgor's rights in the property,<sup>67</sup> at least where the pledgee has notice of the assignment.<sup>68</sup>

In general one who has acquired the interest of the pledgor in pledged property acquires only the pledgor's equity in such property.<sup>69</sup> A person who acquires from the pledgor the latter's interest in the pledged property, with knowledge of the contract of pledge and subject to such contract, takes subject to the rights of a person holding the secured debt and the pledge under a valid assignment by the pledgee.<sup>70</sup> A pledgee who, on payment of the debt secured and at the request of the pledgor, has transferred to the purchaser from the pledgor mortgages which were the subject matter of the pledge is not liable to the purchaser because prior mortgages were in default at the time of the transfer to such purchaser, in the absence of any misrepresentation by the pledgee.<sup>71</sup>

If the purchaser of the pledgor's interest later redeems the pledged property, he does not thereupon become entitled to enforce the obligation for which the security was given.<sup>72</sup>

Assignee of unpledged part of single collateral. Where the payee of a note payable in installments has pledged a part of the installments to secure his debt, the payee's assignment of the unpledged installments may be sufficient to vest an equity in the assignee,<sup>73</sup> and, where the pledgee of a part of the installments, with knowledge of the facts, has collected the full amount of the note, the assignee who has acquired such an equity may recover from the pledgee the amount of the unpledged installments.<sup>74</sup>

If, by agreement, the subject matter of a pledge remains in the pledgor's possession, his sale thereof binds all claiming under him, except purchasers without notice; but, where the pledgee has possession, an implication of notice arises, binding the purchaser to ascertain the pledgee's status by inquiry.—*Eagle, Inc. v. must be fair and not induced by fraud or oppression and that the consideration must be adequate, as a general rule the pledgee may acquire from the pledgor the pledgor's interest in the pledged property, as, for example, in discharge of the debt or obligation secured.

It has been held or recognized that the purchase by the pledgee from the pledgor at a private sale of the pledgor's interest in the property pledged is not necessarily invalid,<sup>75</sup> and that the pledgee may take a transfer of the pledged property from the pledgor in satisfaction of the debt secured,<sup>76</sup> provided such property is taken at a fair market value.<sup>77</sup> The view has been taken, however, that the purchase by the pledgee of the remaining interest in the property is presumed to be fraudulent and void<sup>78</sup> unless the pledgee can show that it was fair, open, bona fide, and for an adequate consideration;<sup>79</sup> but this rule does not apply to the sale of the property under an execution against the pledgor,<sup>80</sup> and the pledgee is free to buy at such sale.<sup>81</sup> A purchase of the property by the pledgee does not extinguish his rights under the pledge as against an intervening garnishment by a creditor,<sup>82</sup> but he will hold the legal title subject to the payment of the debt for which the property was pledged to him and to the payment of the debt of the garnishing creditor.<sup>83</sup>

- b. Tender of performance or payment
- c. Partial payment or discharge
- d. Negligence or other tort of pledgee
- e. Matters affecting pledge of property for debt of third person

a. In General

Generally, the discharge of the pledged property from the contract of pledge is effected by the performance of the pledgor's obligation secured by the pledge, as, for example, by payment or other termination or discharge of the debt secured.

Where the obligation for which a pledge is given no longer exists, usually the pledge agreement is no longer effective.<sup>84</sup> Accordingly, the discharge of the pledged property from the contract of pledge may be effected by performance of the pledgor's obligation secured by the pledge,<sup>85</sup> as, for example, by payment of the debt secured<sup>86</sup> or by other termination or discharge of such debt.<sup>87</sup> Subject to rules of general application, stated in Payment §§ 3-37, what constitutes payment depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>88</sup> Payment to the pledgee made by the person who is

Payment must be of such validity as to comply with the requisites of the law as to payment.—Peru Van Zandt Impl. Co. v. Burnett, 122 P. 668, 32 Okl. 304.

Payment not shown

Where the note of a person who had acquired merely the equity of the pledgor in the pledged collateral was taken in substitution for the note of the pledgor which was marked "paid" and the same collateral was pledged to secure the note so substituted, it was held that the pledgee did not lose his interest in the collateral.—Moore v. First Nat. Bank of Jonesboro, 205 S.W. 902, 135 Ark. 369.

Two notes of same debtor

(1) A creditor who holds two notes of his debtor for the same

liable as obligor on the pledged collateral may be sufficient to discharge the debt secured.<sup>89</sup> A payment excluding expenses for which the pledgee is entitled to reimbursement is insufficient to discharge the pledgee's lien.<sup>90</sup>

Generally, the payment or satisfaction of the principal debt does not result in the discharge or payment of the obligation or debt evidenced by collateral which has been pledged to secure such principal debt.<sup>91</sup> Where, however, the obligor on the pledged collateral pays to the pledgee sufficient to discharge the principal debt, the payment has been regarded as a payment pro tanto on such obligor's own obligation.<sup>92</sup> A discharge of the obligation or debt evidenced by the collateral may result from a transaction between the obligor on such collateral and the pledgor.<sup>93</sup>

b. Tender of Performance or Payment

(1) In general

(2) Sufficiency of tender

(1) In General

On due tender of performance of the obligation for which the pledge is security, the lien of the pledge is discharged, even though such tender is not accepted by the pledgee.

On a proper tender of performance of the pledgor's obligation,<sup>94</sup> as, for example, tender of the amount due on the principal obligation,<sup>95</sup> the lien of the pledgee is discharged, even though such tender is refused by the pledgee.<sup>96</sup> Such tender, if it is not accepted, does not, however, discharge the debt secured.<sup>97</sup>

Tender of a larger amount than is due is not necessarily an admission that the amount tendered is due.<sup>98</sup>

(2) Sufficiency of Tender

What constitutes a tender of performance of the secured obligation sufficient to discharge the lien of the pledgee depends on the particular facts and circumstances involved.

What constitutes a sufficient tender to discharge the lien of a pledge will depend on the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>99</sup> The tender must be valid in the sense that it must comply with the requisites of the law as to tender,<sup>1</sup> and, where securities are held as collateral for several items of indebtedness, a tender which does not include all such items does not operate to release the securities.<sup>2</sup>

A mere offer to pay the amount of the debt for which property has been pledged, not accompanied by an actual tender of money, is insufficient to discharge the pledgee's lien or entitle the pledgor to a return of the property.<sup>3</sup>

Tender on condition that property be returned. It has been held or recognized that a tender is not vitiated by the demand of the pledgor at that time that the property be returned to him,<sup>4</sup> at least if the amount of the debt is not in dispute,<sup>5</sup> but, where the amount is in dispute, a tender on such condition has been regarded as insufficient.<sup>6</sup>

6. Neb.—Wilkins v. Redding, 97 N. W. 238, 70 Neb. 182.

49 C.J. p 969 note 39.

Time of tender. Ordinarily tender may be made at or after maturity of the debt.<sup>7</sup> It should, however, be made before sale of the collateral for default.<sup>8</sup>

Keeping tender good. It has been held or recognized that, under all circumstances, it is not necessary that the tender should be kept good,<sup>9</sup> at least in order to enable the pledgor to avail himself of it as a defense to an action by the pledgee to enforce the collateral.<sup>10</sup> The view has been taken, however, that, under some circumstances, if the pledgor seeks affirmative relief, he must keep his tender good, or at least offer to pay the amount into court.<sup>11</sup>

c. Partial Payment or Discharge

Partial payments on the principal debt may operate pro tanto to reduce the lien of the pledgee on the collaterals.

Partial payments on the principal debt operate pro tanto to reduce the lien of the pledgee on the collaterals,<sup>12</sup> but, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the pledgee is entitled to hold the property pledged until the debt secured has been tendered or paid in full, regardless of partial payment on the secured debt, as discussed supra § 29.

Where, on the receipt by the pledgee or his agent of funds sufficient to discharge the debt, he is induced through the fraud of the pledgor to permit their application in part on other debts, the pledge remains in full force as to the balance due.<sup>13</sup>

While the view has been taken that the secured debt is discharged to the extent of the loss resulting from the pledgee's failure to preserve the pledged property, according to some authorities loss or depreciation in the value of such property caused by the pledgee's negligence does not of itself operate to extinguish pro tanto the debt secured.

While the view has been taken that, where the pledgee by his own fault fails to preserve the pledged property, the secured debt is discharged to the extent of the loss,<sup>14</sup> according to some authorities loss or depreciation in value of the property pledged, through negligence of the pledgee, does not of itself operate to extinguish pro tanto the debt secured,<sup>15</sup> although it will entitle the pledgor to damages, as considered supra § 33.

Conversion of pledged property. According to some authorities, conversion of the collateral by the pledgee constitutes a discharge of the secured debt to the extent of the value of the property converted,<sup>16</sup> but conversion by the pledgee of pledged property having an ascertainable market value does not effect a satisfaction of the entire debt secured if the just value of the pledged property is less than the amount of the debt.<sup>17</sup>

With respect to a pledge made to secure the debt of a third person, generally any material alteration of the principal contract, which is not consented to by the pledgor, will discharge the pledge. Under some circumstances, the owner of property which is pledged to secure the debt of another may make a tender of the amount of the secured debt sufficient to discharge the lien on the pledged property.

Where a pledge is given to secure the debt of another, for which the pledgor assumes the liability of a surety, any material alteration in the principal contract, not assented to by the pledgor, will discharge the pledge,<sup>18</sup> and, where property is pledged for the debt of a third person, the discharge of such person from liability for the debt may constitute an effective release of the lien on the pledged property,<sup>19</sup> as, for example, where the pledgee releases such debt.<sup>20</sup> It has been held or recognized, however, that the collateral is not discharged by the extension of time of payment of loan by a lender lacking notice that the collateral was owned by a third person.<sup>21</sup>

The owner of property which has been pledged to secure the debt of another may, under some circumstances at least, make a tender of payment of such debt sufficient to discharge the lien of the pledgee,<sup>22</sup> and such tender may be sufficient to discharge the lien, even though the tender is not kept good.<sup>23</sup>

f. Other Transactions

A discharge of the collateral contract or pledge may be effected by a surrender of the principal obligation, by an avoidance of the principal contract by the pledgee, or by a substantial fulfillment of the condition accepted by the pledgee.

A discharge of the collateral contract or pledge may be effected by a surrender of the principal obligation,<sup>24</sup> by an avoidance of the principal contract by the pledgee,<sup>25</sup> such as the pledgee's sale of the property making it impossible for him to fulfill his obligation for ultimate return thereof to the pledgor,<sup>26</sup> or by substantial fulfillment of the condition accepted by the pledgee.<sup>27</sup> On the other hand, it has been held or recognized that the collateral is not discharged by the giving of a renewal note for the secured debt, as discussed supra § 28, failure duly to present the secured note for payment,<sup>28</sup> or an unsupported parol promise to release collateral.<sup>29</sup>

g. Effect of Discharge of Pledged Property by Discharge of Secured Obligation

On the discharge of collateral which was pledged by the owner, by payment or other discharge of the principal obligation, the pledgor becomes the absolute owner and is entitled to the possession of the collateral.

On the discharge of collateral owned by the pledgor by payment or other discharge of the principal obligation, the pledgor becomes the absolute owner of the collateral,<sup>30</sup> and is entitled to the possession thereof,<sup>31</sup> freed from any right of the pledgee to hold it for any debt other than that for which it was pledged<sup>32</sup> and from any right of set-off which a third person might have against the pledgee.<sup>33</sup>

Where the pledgee has the legal title to the property, he will hold it as a mere naked trustee for the pledgor,<sup>34</sup> and any payments made to him on the collaterals will be held for the use of the pledgor.<sup>35</sup> Where the pledgee realizes enough from a portion of the collaterals to pay the principal debt, his interest in the remaining collaterals is extinguished.<sup>36</sup> The pledgee, after collecting from the obligor on the pledged collateral sufficient to satisfy the secured debt, holds the collateral, credited with the payment, in trust for the pledgor<sup>37</sup> or his assignee.<sup>38</sup> Where the pledgee has collected the whole amount due on collateral pledged by two debtors, he may, after applying sufficient to discharge the debt secured, pay over the balance to the debtors in such shares as their individual interests may appear.<sup>39</sup>

Where, after the discharge of the pledge contract by discharge of the debt secured, the pledged property remains in the possession of the pledgee, the pledgee has been regarded as a depository for the pledgor,<sup>40</sup> or, under some circumstances, the transaction has been regarded as a gratuitous bailment.<sup>41</sup> With respect to collateral pledged which is owned by another than the pledgor, after the payment of the principal debt the pledgee holds the

§ 47. Return of Property on Discharge of Secured Debt

Generally on discharge of the obligation secured by the pledge, or on due tender of the performance of such obligation, the pledgor or his assignee is entitled to the return of the property pledged.

While usually the pledgor is not entitled to the return of the pledged property until he has in some form discharged his obligation,<sup>43</sup> as, for example, by payment of the debt secured,<sup>44</sup> or has made due tender of performance or payment of his obligation or debt,<sup>45</sup> on the discharge of the obligation the pledge was given to secure, the pledgor<sup>46</sup> or his assignee, or successor in interest,<sup>47</sup> is entitled to the collateral, or its proceeds,<sup>48</sup> if any remain.<sup>49</sup> So, the pledgor may be entitled to the return of the pledged property on due tender of performance of the obligation secured by the pledge.<sup>50</sup> Also, where an indorser of a note secured by collateral takes it up, he may be entitled to the benefit of the collateral.<sup>51</sup> These rights, however, are extinguished, it seems, where the entire collateral has been required to satisfy the principal obligation<sup>52</sup> or where the pledgor's remaining interest has been exhausted under legal process for the payment of other claims against him.<sup>53</sup> On tender of the amount due on a debt, the pledgor is entitled to a surrender only of the collateral which was deposited for the particular debt.<sup>54</sup>

(1) On discharge of the debt due to a senior pledgee by application of the proceeds of part of the collateral, a junior pledgee to whom the pledgor has assigned his interest in the pledged property may be entitled to the possession of the remaining proceeds of the collateral and to other collateral.—Schram v. Sage, D.C.Mich., 46 F.Supp. 381, petition for rehearing overruled 47 F.Supp. 94.

(2) In such case the right of the assignee of the junior pledgee to obtain possession of the remaining proceeds and the other collateral was not defeated by mere lapse of time which was the only circumstance indicating laches.—Schram v. Sage, D.C.Mich., 47 F.Supp. 94.

The pledgee's obligation to return the pledged property on the pledgor's performance or payment of his obligation or debt or on due tender in that respect, as considered generally infra § 48, and the pledgor's obligation so to perform, pay, or make tender are reciprocal,<sup>55</sup> and neither can require performance by the other unless he himself is able and ready to perform.<sup>56</sup>

If the pledgee has acquired an absolute interest in the collateral in his own right, the pledgor is not entitled to a return thereof.<sup>57</sup>

A pledgor may recover property pledged to secure a note subsequently declared void for illegality,<sup>58</sup> or the value of such property if it is no longer under the pledgee's control.<sup>59</sup>

What constitutes a sufficient return of the collateral to the pledgor will depend on the facts and circumstances involved.<sup>60</sup>

§ 48. — Duty of Pledgee to Return

On the discharge of the obligation secured by the pledge, or on due tender of performance of such obligation, generally it becomes the duty of the pledgee to return the pledged property or its proceeds to the pledgor.

Whenever the obligation which the pledge was given to secure is discharged, it becomes the duty of the pledgee to return the property or its proceeds, if any, to the pledgor,<sup>61</sup> and, according to

There is an implied agreement on the part of the pledgee to return the pledge on payment of the secured debt.—Pepper v. Beville, 129 So. 334, 100 Fla. 97.

Equity

Pledgee's duty to care for the pledge and restore it includes any equity.—Overbury v. Platten, C.C.A. N.Y., 108 F.2d 155, 126 A.L.R. 185, certiorari denied 61 S.Ct. 21, 311 U.S. 664, 85 L.Ed. 426.

Agreement to protect pledgor

Where pledgor of bonds, on payment of entire debt, received back all but one bond which pledgee could not find, pledgee's written agreement to replace lost bond or to secure the payment of the amount of such bond to the pledgor at maturity, made prior to such payment in full, was supported by sufficient consideration, even if bond was stolen without pledgee's negligence, since pledgee was prima facie under legal duty to return bond on payment of debt and pledgor waived right to obtain bond.—Till v. Material Service Corporation, 5 N.E.2d 769, 288 Ill.App. 103.

Property pledged for debt of another

Where a person deposited a sum of money to secure the payment of the debt of a third person, the creditor was not entitled to retain the deposit after such third person had been discharged from liability to pay such debt, and was liable for interest on the amount of the deposit from the date of such discharge to the date of the return of the deposit.—Lupowitz v. Double Share Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 14 Pa.Dist. & Co. 230.

Obligation of debtor held as collateral

some authorities, a like rule applies in the case of due tender of performance or payment of his obligation or debt by the pledgor.<sup>62</sup> The pledgee cannot lawfully retain the property to secure a debt distinct from that for which it was pledged.<sup>63</sup>

The failure<sup>64</sup> or refusal<sup>65</sup> of the pledgee to return the collateral on payment of the principal debt, or on performance of the secured obligation,<sup>66</sup> is itself a conversion, and a sufficient tender of payment or performance and an unauthorized refusal and retention of the pledged property by the pledgee also constitute a conversion,<sup>67</sup> or at least prima facie evidence of a conversion.<sup>68</sup>

Where the obligation of one who has pledged his property to secure the debt of a third person is released by reason of a change or alteration in the principal obligation, the pledgee's refusal to return the property constitutes a conversion<sup>69</sup> for which the pledgee may be liable in damages.<sup>70</sup> While the view has been taken that the pledgee is not in default until a demand for the return of the pledged property, accompanied by tender of payment of the secured debt, is made by the pledgor,<sup>71</sup> tender is not essential to complete conversion where the pledgee has clearly indicated an intention to retain the property irrespective of tender.<sup>72</sup> A tender of payment of the secured debt, a demand for return of the pledged property, and failure to return do not constitute a conversion where the tender and demand are made when the pledgor knows that the law renders it impossible for the pledgee to accept the tender or to comply with the demand.<sup>73</sup> Retraction of the refusal before suit has been held to show that there was no conversion.<sup>74</sup>

Return of identical property. Usually the pledgee on payment of the principal debt must return the identical property pledged,<sup>75</sup> but this rule is not necessarily applicable to property of an interchangeable character.<sup>76</sup> It has been stated broadly that, in order to render a pledgee liable for conversion,

Limitation on obligation

Pledgee need do no more than return property remaining after debt is paid, and has no responsibility for vicissitudes thereof unless he provokes them.—Flat-Marks Realty Corporation v. Silver's Lunch Stores, C. C.A.N.Y., 74 F.2d 210, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 640, 294 U.S. 731, 79 L. Ed. 1260.

Delivery to obligor on pledged collateral

(1) The act of the pledgee who has collected from the obligor on the pledged collateral sufficient to satisfy the debt secured in delivering such collateral to such obligor, without the consent of the pledgor, constitutes a conversion regardless of whether the pledgee was negligent.—*Vaughn v. ## § 49. — Actions

- a. In general
- b. Form of action
- c. Conditions precedent
- d. Defenses
- e. Pleading and evidence
- f. Amount of recovery and judgment

a. In General

Generally, on the discharge or payment of the principal obligation or debt, an appropriate action will lie to compel the return of the pledged property, and failure to return may be the basis of an action for conversion.

Where the principal obligation or debt has been discharged or paid, delivery back of the collateral or of the property pledged may generally be compelled by appropriate action.<sup>78</sup> The pledgor may be entitled to recover the pledged property from a remote transferee of the pledgee.<sup>79</sup>

If the pledgee refuses to return the pledged collateral on discharge of the secured debt, an action for the conversion may be maintained by the pledgor,<sup>80</sup> or his assignee<sup>81</sup> or legal representative.<sup>82</sup>

b. Form of Action

Under varying circumstances, on the discharge of the contract of pledge and failure of the pledgee to return the pledged property, a possessory action for such property itself, an action for money had and received to recover the proceeds of such property, or other appropriate action may lie.

The remedy of the pledgor for the conversion of the pledged property or for a failure to return it may be in replevin or other possessory action for the property itself,<sup>83</sup> by an action in assumpsit for money had and received to recover its proceeds,<sup>84</sup> or damages for breach of contract,<sup>85</sup> by an action in trover,<sup>86</sup> or under some circumstances, where necessary to obtain adequate redress, by a proceeding or suit in equity.<sup>87</sup> Generally, the rules hereinbefore stated apply to the pledgor's assignee.<sup>88</sup>

According to some authorities the pledgor may secure return of the collateral by showing payment and asking return in a suit on the secured debt.<sup>89</sup>

c. Conditions Precedent

Demand for the return of the pledged property or collateral on discharge of the principal obligation is not necessarily essential in order to require such return, but under some circumstances such demand is essential.

On discharge of his obligation the pledgor usually may maintain an action for the recovery of the pledge or its proceeds without a distinct demand for the return of the property;<sup>90</sup> but the pledgor cannot maintain an action without first demanding a return of the collateral where the pledgeholder is not the person to whom payment is made<sup>91</sup> or where the pledgor has merely an option to withdraw the collateral pro rata on partial payment of the debt.<sup>92</sup>

Basis of action

Pledgor's action to recover pledged property after pledgee's refusal or failure to restore it on pledgor's demand, accompanied by tender of payment of debt secured is founded on breach of contract, although treated as for conversion, and pledgee is entitled to recoup debt.—Bardsley v. Where mortgagors, in addition to realty described in mortgages, in-

The necessity of tender of payment of the principal debt as a condition precedent to an action by the pledgor to recover pledged property or its proceeds is discussed supra § 39, and the necessity of such tender as a condition precedent to an action by the pledgor for damages for conversion, supra § 40.

d. Defenses

In an action by a pledgor based on the failure of the pledgee to return the pledged property, it is a good defense that the secured obligation has not been discharged and that due tender in discharge or payment of such obligation has not been made.

It is a good defense that the secured obligation has not been discharged and that due tender in discharge or payment of such obligation has not been made,<sup>93</sup> or that there has been a material alteration in the collateral since its execution.<sup>94</sup> It is no defense that the collateral was worthless, or of any less value than the amount paid to the pledgee on it,<sup>95</sup> that plaintiff was not the owner of the claim sued on,<sup>96</sup> or that, at the time of the tender and demand, a suit by a third person claiming title to the property was pending.<sup>97</sup>

e. Pleading and Evidence

Rules governing pleading and evidence in civil actions generally apply in actions by a pledgor involving want of return of the pledged property.

Rules governing civil actions generally apply to actions involving failure to return pledged property with respect to the pleadings.<sup>99</sup> In accordance with the general rules of evidence, plaintiff pledgor must prove compliance or tender of compliance with his obligation,<sup>1</sup> and generally the burden of proof is on the pledgee to show the circumstances of the loss relied on to excuse a return.<sup>2</sup> General rules of evidence also apply with respect to the admissibility<sup>3</sup> and the weight and sufficiency of evidence.<sup>4</sup>

f. Amount of Recovery and Judgment

In an action against a pledgee for failure to return the pledged property on discharge of the principal obligation or of the contract of pledge, the amount recoverable is the actual loss sustained by reason of defendant's wrongful act.

In an action against a pledgee for failure to return the collateral on payment or tender, the amount of recovery is the actual loss suffered by reason of defendant's wrongful act.<sup>5</sup> Where the pledgee has wrongfully refused to return the pledged property on due payment or tender of payment of the principal debt, generally he is responsible for any subsequent depreciation in the value of the pledge;<sup>6</sup> but under an agreement by which the pledgor has a right to return of collateral in proportion to the amount of the debt paid, the pledgee is not liable for depreciation in value of collateral

Going forward with evidence

until demand has been made for its return.<sup>7</sup> In an action on the principal debt, the pledgor is entitled to set off any sums realized by the creditor from collaterals, as discussed infra § 55, and may in an independent action recover any surplus in the pledgee's possession after satisfaction of the debt.<sup>8</sup> A judgment in replevin for plaintiff should fix the amount, if any, plaintiff is required to pay into court before recovering the pledged property.<sup>9</sup>

A person who has pledged his money to secure payment of the debt of another is entitled to interest from the date of discharge of such debt to the date of return of such money.<sup>10</sup>

§ 50. Redemption

- a. In general
- b. Sale or conversion of pledged property
- c. Time of redemption
- d. Persons entitled to redeem
- e. Amount and medium of payment or tender
- f. Surrender or loss of right

a. In General

Generally, on default of the pledgor with respect to discharging the principal obligation, the pledgee holds the pledged property subject to the pledgor's right of redemption until there has been a lawful sale of such property.

On default of the pledgor with respect to discharging the principal obligation at maturity, the pledgee does not acquire title to the collateral, but holds it subject to the right of redemption in the pledgor,<sup>11</sup> or his representative,<sup>12</sup> until this right has been extinguished by a lawful sale of the property.<sup>13</sup> So also, the assignee of the pledgee who has stepped into the shoes of the pledgee holds the pledged property subject to the right of the pledgor to redeem.<sup>14</sup> It has been stated broadly that the pledge contract, in so far as it affects the pledgor's equity of redemption, will be construed favorably to the pledgor, consistently with the rights of the pledgee.<sup>15</sup>

Statutory provisions authorizing the pledgee to foreclose the right of redemption by a judicial sale should not be construed as granting the pledgor a right of redemption from the foreclosure similar to that possessed by a real estate mortgagor.<sup>16</sup>

b. Sale or Conversion of Pledged Property

Generally the pledgor is entitled to redeem the pledged property within a reasonable time after learning that such property has been wrongfully sold or otherwise converted by the pledgee.

Where the pledgee has been guilty of a wrongful sale or other conversion of the collateral, the pledgor is entitled to redeem it within a reasonable time after learning thereof;<sup>17</sup> but his right of redemption is extinguished where he has authorized<sup>18</sup> or ratified<sup>19</sup> the sale, or where he has failed to assert his right within a reasonable time after receiving notice of a wrongful sale,<sup>20</sup> especially where the collaterals have increased in value since the sale.<sup>21</sup> The pledgor is not limited to a suit for redemption,<sup>22</sup> but may sue for conversion, as considered supra § 40.

Nature of right to redeem

(1) The pledgor has a right of redemption, which is akin to the equity of redemption relating to mortgaged real property, that is, the right to pay off the debt and have the pledged property restored to him.—City of Albertville v. Universal Electric Const. Co. of Alabama, 3 So.2d 801, 241 Ala. 412.

(2) Right to redeem from sale of pledge is generally controlled by rules of law applicable to mortgages.

c. Time of Redemption

The pledgor may redeem at any time before there has been a valid sale or foreclosure of the pledge by the pledgee.

On payment of the proper amount, the pledgor may redeem at any time before a valid sale or foreclosure of the pledge.<sup>23</sup> While the right to redeem may be lost by a valid foreclosure,<sup>24</sup> such right is not extinguished by a wrongful sale or surrender of the property, since the purchaser will acquire no greater interest in the property than the pledgee had;<sup>25</sup> nor is such right of redemption barred by a provision in the contract of pledge that, unless it is redeemed by a certain time, the collateral is to become the property of the pledgee, the pledgor still having the right to redeem after the time fixed.<sup>26</sup> If no time has been fixed for the performance of the principal obligation or for the redemption of the pledge, the pledgor is entitled to a reasonable time after demand by the pledgee before sale or foreclosure.<sup>27</sup>

d. Persons Entitled to Redeem

On the death of the pledgor, his right of redemption passes to his personal representative, or, under some circumstances, to his heirs. The owner of property which has been pledged without his consent generally has the right to redeem, and the original pledgor has the right to redeem from a subpledgee.

On the death of the pledgor, his right of redemption passes to his personal representative,<sup>28</sup> or, under some circumstances, to his heirs.<sup>29</sup> Redemption may be made by the owner of property which has been pledged without his consent<sup>30</sup> or by a prior pledgee who has assented to the subsequent pledge.<sup>31</sup>

The original pledgor ordinarily has the right to redeem from a subpledgee on payment of whatever is due under the circumstances involved.<sup>32</sup>

e. Amount and Medium of Payment or Tender

Generally, as a prerequisite to his right to redeem, the pledgor must pay or tender the amount of the principal debt, together with any interest which is due and the amount of any expenses of the pledgee which are chargeable on the pledge.

In the absence of an agreement providing for a different procedure, as a prerequisite to his right to redeem the pledgor must pay or tender the amount of the principal debt,<sup>33</sup> together with whatever interest is due,<sup>34</sup> and any expenses of the pledgee properly chargeable on the pledge,<sup>35</sup> subject to a reduction, however, to the extent of any benefit or profits derived by the pledgee from the possession or use of the property.<sup>36</sup> Where the pledged property is in the hands of the pledgee's transferee who is not an innocent purchaser for value, the pledgor is entitled to redeem on payment of the amount due from him.<sup>37</sup>

The pledgee cannot prevent redemption by refusing to disclose the exact amount due on the debt, and denying that the tender made was the proper

Joint pledge

Pledgee was not liable for conversion in refusing to surrender joint pledgor's stock, where such pledgor made no offer to satisfy entire debt for which stock was pledged.—National Bank of Kentucky v. Gallagher, 49 S.W.2d 1006, 243 Ky. 740.

Collateral pledged for debt of another

Where the owner of collateral delivered it to the creditor of a third person for the purpose of securing some indebtedness of such third person, there was no definite agreement as to the amount of the indebtedness for which the collateral was security, and the owner of the collateral never agreed that the collateral would secure all the indebtedness of such third person, it was held that such owner was entitled to redeem on payment of an amount less than the full amount of the indebtedness of such third person.—Matz v. sum;<sup>38</sup> and where the pledgee, without objection, accepts the amount tendered, he cannot afterward refuse to return the collateral on the ground that the amount tendered was insufficient.<sup>39</sup>

Property pledged to secure a loan in foreign money may be redeemed on payment in such currency.<sup>40</sup>

f. Surrender or Loss of Right

It is not permissible to surrender the right of redemption by a provision in the original contract of pledge, but the pledgor may surrender such right by a contract which is supported by a separate consideration and which is made after the contract of pledge has become operative.

The right of redemption may not be surrendered by the terms of the original contract of pledge;<sup>41</sup> a pledge agreement whereby a pledgor is deprived of his equity of redemption is void on the grounds of public policy,<sup>42</sup> and is inoperative to terminate the equity of redemption.<sup>43</sup> The pledgor, however, may surrender his right to redeem by a contract for a separate consideration made after the original contract of pledge.<sup>44</sup> Equity will scrutinize such a contract with great care, and set it aside if it is harsh or unconscionable.<sup>45</sup> The right to redeem may not be denied on the ground that it has been waived or abandoned by the pledgor, where the right is recognized by the pledgee.<sup>46</sup>

The pledgor may maintain an action against the pledgee to redeem, and also, where there is doubt or dispute as to the amount due on the debt, for an accounting.

The pledgor may maintain an action against the pledgee not only to redeem,<sup>47</sup> but also, where there is doubt or dispute as to the amount due on the debt, for an accounting.<sup>48</sup> The mere relationship of pledgor and pledgee, however, is insufficient to serve as the basis for an accounting.<sup>49</sup> In an action by the pledgee to enforce the contract of pledge, the pledgor may file a cross bill to redeem, on tender of an amount sufficient to discharge the debt.<sup>50</sup>

b. Nature of Remedy

The pledgor's remedy to redeem is, in general, at law, but it may be permissible to resort to equity where a ground of equitable jurisdiction is shown.

The remedy of the pledgor to redeem is, in general, at law.<sup>51</sup> A bill in equity will not lie to redeem pledged property<sup>52</sup> except on a showing of some additional ground of equitable jurisdiction,<sup>53</sup> such as a sale or assignment of the pledge by the pledgee, and a demand for its retransfer to the pledgor,<sup>54</sup> or a request for an accounting,<sup>55</sup> or discovery.<sup>56</sup>

c. Payment or Tender of Amount of Debt

Generally payment or tender of the amount of the secured debt is essential in order to permit the pledgor to recover possession of the pledged property, but various circumstances may excuse want of tender.

While, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, generally a pledgor cannot recover possession of the pledged property without paying or tendering his debt,<sup>57</sup> even though the debt is barred by the statute of limitations, as discussed in Limitations of Actions § 10 a, it has been held or recognized that tender of the amount of the debt is not required where the goods are pledged to secure a running account<sup>58</sup> or where the pledgor sues to redeem from a wrongful sale by the pledgee.<sup>59</sup> It is unnecessary to make a tender where the pledgee gives notice that tender will not be accepted.<sup>60</sup>

d. Limitations and Laches

While mere lapse of time after the maturity of the principal obligation does not bar the pledgor's right to redeem, laches or delay injurious to the pledgee may bar such right.

Mere lapse of time after the maturity of the principal obligation does not bar the pledgor's right to redeem,<sup>61</sup> or an accounting incidental to redemption,<sup>62</sup> unless it is accompanied by elements of estoppel.<sup>63</sup> Laches, however, injurious to the pledgee<sup>64</sup> may bar the right to redeem.<sup>65</sup> Whether or not laches exist in any particular case will depend on the facts and circumstances involved.<sup>66</sup> The right to redeem should not be denied on the ground that it has been lost by laches where the right is recognized by the pledgee.<sup>67</sup>

Accrual of cause of action with respect to the statute of limitations in the case of a pledge considered in the aspect of a trust is discussed in Limitations of Actions § 179 d (2).

e. Parties

In a suit by the pledgor to redeem the pledge, persons who have an interest in the pledge, and only such persons, are necessary parties.

In a suit for redemption, all persons having an interest in the pledge should be made parties;<sup>68</sup> but persons not interested in the pledge are not necessary parties,<sup>69</sup> and generally are not proper parties.<sup>70</sup> A decree for accounting and redemption with respect to property sold by the pledgee on foreclosure should be dismissed as to independent purchasers on foreclosure.<sup>71</sup>

f. Pleading

The bill or petition to redeem should allege a pledge and state the terms of the contract of pledge, should show the plaintiff's interest in the collateral, and allege or tender a fulfillment of the conditions entitling the plaintiff to redeem.

The bill or petition to redeem should allege a pledge<sup>72</sup> and state the terms of the contract of pledge,<sup>73</sup> should show plaintiff's interest in the collateral,<sup>74</sup> and allege or tender a fulfillment of the conditions entitling him to redeem.<sup>75</sup> The bill or petition must be free from inapt allegations and purposes,<sup>76</sup> and must state a cause of action.<sup>77</sup> A bill affirmatively showing that the pledged property is not in defendant's control is defective as a bill to redeem.<sup>78</sup> The pledgor in an action for redemption and accounting need not allege the amount of his claim.<sup>79</sup> It has been held or recognized that, in a suit against a transferee from the pledgee, it is not necessary to allege that defendant took with notice of plaintiff's rights.<sup>80</sup>

g. Evidence

The general rules of evidence apply in an action to redeem a pledge.

Mere delay on the part of the pledgor in redeeming ordinarily will not raise a presumption of abandonment,<sup>81</sup> although it would seem that such a presumption may arise from a prolonged failure to take steps for redemption.<sup>82</sup>

Admissibility. In accordance with rules applicable in civil actions generally, the evidence should be relevant and material.<sup>83</sup> The pledgor may introduce evidence to show that a transfer of the collateral by the pledgee was not a sale under the contract, but was merely colorable.<sup>84</sup> Exhibits filed by plaintiff may constitute evidence to sustain and supplement defendant's pleadings.<sup>85</sup> An action by the pledgee on the principal debt is an admission that the pledgor's right to redeem is still open.<sup>86</sup>

Weight and sufficiency. The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply in actions to redeem,<sup>87</sup> and the burden is on one seeking a redemption to establish his case by a preponderance of evidence.<sup>88</sup>

h. Judgment or Decree

In an action by the pledgor to redeem the pledge, the judgment or decree may contain a direction for the plaintiff's payment of the debt secured as a condition of relief to him and such other provisions as circumstances and the evidence warrant.

The judgment in a suit for redemption should order a payment of the amount for which the pledge is security as a condition to the return of the pledge.<sup>89</sup> So too, when a suit is brought against a bona fide holder to redeem property wrongfully sold or repledged to him, the court may decree the payment of defendant's claim as a condition to redemption, and declare plaintiff's rights extinguished if the condition is not performed.<sup>90</sup> Where, pending a suit for redemption and accounting, or before suit brought, but unknown to the pledgor, the pledgee has sold the property, the judgment may be that the pledgee account for the value of the pledge at the time of its conversion.<sup>91</sup> A pledgor redeeming a pledged mortgage after foreclosure of the mortgage may be entitled to a decree for the reconveyance of the land,<sup>92</sup> and the decree should also specify that the amount paid the mortgagee be credited on the pledgor's debt to the pledgee.<sup>93</sup>

i. Costs

While the pledgor may be chargeable with costs where his debt had not been paid when his bill to redeem was filed, the pledgee may be so chargeable where such debt had been paid at the time of the filing of the bill.

While it seems that generally, if the pledgor's debt has not been paid at the time of the filing of

VII. ENFORCEMENT

§ 52. Remedies of Pledgee

- a. In general
- b. Concurrent remedies and election
- c. By special agreement
- d. Pledge of commercial paper
- e. Pledge of two or more collaterals
- f. Appropriation of pledge to debt
- g. Against real owner of property
- h. Against adverse claimant

a. In General

In the absence of a statutory or contractual provision to the contrary, a pledgee may proceed against the pledgor on the original debt or liability, or he may proceed on the pledge, or he may sell the pledged property without judicial process, or he may bring suit to foreclose the pledge.

The pledgee, on default of the pledgor, in the discharge of the principal obligation, may proceed to collect the pledge,<sup>97</sup> or he may, in the absence of statutory or contractual provision or other lawful agreement aliunde the agreement of pledge, proceed personally against the pledgor on the original debt or liability, or he may proceed on the pledge and may sell the pledged property without judicial process, on reasonable notice to the debtor to redeem, or he may bring a suit to foreclose the pledge and obtain a judicial sale of the property.<sup>98</sup> The default gives the pledgee only the right to realize on the pledge in some appropriate proceeding,<sup>99</sup> and collateral security is to be resorted to only if the pledgor fails to perform the principal contract.<sup>1</sup> A pledge is not a lien within the terms of a statute requiring that there be but one action for the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage or lien.<sup>2</sup> Where the legal title to property held as security is in the creditor, who intrusts the property to the debtor, the trust is enforceable at law, but if the legal title is in the debtor, who holds in trust for the creditor, the trust is enforceable in equity only.<sup>3</sup> A court of equity has been held to have an inherent right to deal with pledges.<sup>4</sup>

All proceedings in foreclosure of a void pledge are without effect, and give the pledgee no better title than before.<sup>5</sup>

Where property is deposited with the pledgor for a special purpose, under an express reservation of right in the pledgee to retake it, the fact that he does retake it does not affect his remedies against the pledgor.<sup>6</sup>

b. Concurrent Remedies and Election

A pledgee having concurrent remedies may pursue them concurrently or separately.

A pledgee holding collateral securities may bring concurrent suits on the principal obligation and on the collateral securities held by him,<sup>7</sup> or he may pursue such remedies singly,<sup>8</sup> or he may sue to foreclose the pledge lien, or on the collateral itself, in the same action on the original debt of the pledgor.<sup>9</sup> It has been held that the pledgee may proceed under a hypothecation statute or in equity.<sup>10</sup> The pledgee may not be compelled to make an election as to whether he will enforce the principal or collateral obligation,<sup>11</sup> although there can be but one satisfaction of the principal debt or obligation.<sup>12</sup> The fact that a pledgee is seeking foreclosure in equity of his real estate security does not prevent enforcement of his pledge of personal property in the statutory manner.<sup>13</sup> On the other hand, where the pledgee, after the maturity of the principal debt, wrongfully transfers the collateral to third persons, he will be held to have elected to take them in satisfaction of his debt, and he will not thereafter be allowed to sue on the principal obligation for any alleged deficiency.<sup>14</sup>

If third person stands as surety for the debt the pledgee may proceed against the surety personally, and at the same time seek to subject any collateral which he may hold.<sup>15</sup>

c. By Special Agreement

The method of enforcement of a pledge may be regulated by the agreement of the parties as long as the agreement is not fraudulent, contrary to statute, or in violation of public policy.

The method of enforcement of the pledge may be regulated by the agreement of the parties,<sup>16</sup> provided such agreement is not fraudulent,<sup>17</sup> in contravention of statute,<sup>18</sup> or against public policy,<sup>19</sup> and ordinarily the rights of the pledgee will be protected.<sup>20</sup> The parties may stipulate that the pledgee may buy the pledged property at private sale at the market price on default by the pledgor<sup>21</sup> or that he may sell at public or private sale with or without notice, and become the purchaser,<sup>22</sup> or they may agree that the pledgee shall exhaust his remedies against the original debtor before resorting to the collateral.<sup>23</sup> Where, however, the method agreed on is not made exclusive, it does not preclude a resort to other methods of enforcement,<sup>24</sup> especially where another method would be to the best interest of both parties.<sup>25</sup> Thus the pledgee of a mortgage has a right to foreclose it, even though the contract of pledge only authorizes the pledgee to sell the mortgage.<sup>26</sup>

d. Pledge of Commercial Paper

Where commercial paper is pledged, the pledgee on default may proceed by action or sale to collect the collateral, or he may proceed to foreclose the pledge, or he may proceed on the original obligation.

In case of a pledge of commercial paper, as the nature of the property pledged indicates,<sup>27</sup> the pledgee, on maturity of the secured debt or obligation and default in payment thereof, may proceed, either by action or sale,<sup>28</sup> to collect the collateral and apply the proceeds to such debt or obligation,<sup>29</sup> and this rule applies even though the pledgee holds other collateral<sup>30</sup> and even though the pledged collateral contains a provision for its sale on default in payment of the principal obligation;<sup>31</sup> and it has also been held to apply although the maker of the paper has, with knowledge of the pledgee's right, paid the pledgor the amount due him thereon.<sup>32</sup> This remedy, however, is not exclusive;<sup>33</sup> the pledgee may also proceed to foreclose the pledge,<sup>34</sup> or, as discussed infra § 55, he may proceed on the original obligation without restoring the collateral. It has been held that, where a vendor's lien notes are pledged as collateral, the pledgee may foreclose the lien and recover on the principal debt in the same suit.<sup>35</sup>

Bonds. The effect of a pledge of bonds to secure a note of the same obligor is to give the pledgee the power to issue the pledged bonds, thereby increasing the pledgor's debts by foreclosure of the pledge.<sup>36</sup>

Return of unsatisfactory paper. Where it is agreed that unsatisfactory paper deposited as collateral may be returned, such return may be made within a reasonable time,<sup>37</sup> even though the pledgor has, in the meantime, been placed in the hands of a receiver.<sup>38</sup>

e. Pledge of Two or More Collaterals

A pledgee in possession of two or more collaterals may, as a general rule, proceed against all or either of them at his election.

As a general rule, where the pledgee is in possession of two or more collaterals for his debt, he may proceed against either or all of them at his election<sup>39</sup> and cannot be compelled to subject or exhaust one before resorting to the other;<sup>40</sup> and where, after he has resorted to one, there still remains due a sum exceeding the value of the other security, he may proceed against it for its full amount;<sup>41</sup> but he is not obliged to resort to either but may collect through execution on the debt itself.<sup>42</sup> Where a lien is created on property by its delivery as a pledge, and also by a contemporaneous deed of trust, the lien of the pledgee as such may be enforced, even though the enforcement of the deed of trust is barred by the statute of limitations as to chattel mortgages.<sup>43</sup> Where a person having possession of securities belonging to another pledges them without authority together with other securities, and the owner before a sale of the securities notifies the pledgee of his claim, the owner then stands as a mere surety for the claim secured and can compel the pledgee to apply the proceeds of the other securities held in pledge before resorting to those belonging to him.<sup>44</sup> It has also been held that, where a creditor holds two collateral securities, the indorser on one only of which is an accommodation indorser to the knowledge of the creditor, the other security must first be resorted to.<sup>45</sup>

f. Appropriation of Pledge to Debt

- (1) In general
- (2) Effect of agreement authorizing appropriation

(1) In General

Default on the original debt does not work a forfeiture of the pledged property so as to vest it in the pledgee, and he is generally not entitled to take the property in satisfaction of the debt.

45. Mass.—Goodwin v. Massachusetts Loan & Trust Co., 25 N.E. 100, 152 Mass. 189.

The nonpayment of the original debt at the stipulated time does not, either by the civil law or at common law, work a forfeiture of the pledged property so as to vest it in the pledgee;<sup>46</sup> and as a general rule the pledgee is not entitled, on the pledgor's default, to take the pledged property as his own in satisfaction of the debt;<sup>47</sup> nor can the pledgee cut off the pledgor's interest in the collateral by a mere notice that, if the debt is not paid by a certain time, he will take the collateral as his own.<sup>48</sup> So, where a surety who holds collateral to indemnify him against liability on the debt transfers such collateral to the payee for the purpose of discharging the debt, the transfer does not divest the pledgor of his interest in the collateral and he may still redeem it, even after maturity of his debt.<sup>49</sup> The pledgor, however, may be estopped by his conduct to object to the pledgee's appropriation of the property to the debt;<sup>50</sup> and it has been held that, where the amount of the debt is much larger than the value of the collateral which, from its nature, could not increase in value, objection cannot be made to the pledgee's appropriation of the collateral to the debt.<sup>51</sup>

(2) Effect of Agreement Authorizing Appropriation

A provision in the contract of pledge by which the absolute property in the pledge is to vest in the pledgee is void, or at least voidable.

A pledge cannot be taken as, or converted by the pledgee into, a payment of the debt without an express agreement clearly made between the pledgor and the pledgee.<sup>52</sup> A provision in the contract of pledge by which the absolute property in the pledge is to vest in the pledgee, on the default of the pledgor, is void,<sup>53</sup> or at least voidable,<sup>54</sup> and the pledgor is still entitled to redeem.<sup>55</sup> This provision, however, does not vitiate the principal contract;<sup>56</sup> and it has been held that the pledgee may appropriate the property, under such a provision, but he must make the fact of appropriation clear.<sup>57</sup> After the debt for which the pledge has been given has fallen due, the parties may lawfully agree that the pledgee may keep the property in satisfaction of the debt.<sup>58</sup>

Where the owner of property permits it to be pledged to secure the obligation of a third person, he is not liable for a personal judgment, but the pledge may be foreclosed.

An owner of property who consents to its use as a pledge by a third person, to secure the latter's obligation to the pledgee, is not liable for a personal judgment in favor of the pledgee;<sup>59</sup> but, as against him, the pledgee may only foreclose the pledge on the property.<sup>60</sup>

h. Against Adverse Claimant

A pledgee may proceed in equity to have his rights determined and the pledge foreclosed as against an adverse claimant.

Where the property has been wrongfully taken from the possession of the pledgee without his knowledge and consent, by an adverse claimant, if default is made in the payment of the debt at maturity and the property still remains in the possession of the adverse claimant, the pledgee may maintain a bill in equity to determine the rights of the parties to the property, and to enforce the pledge by judicial sale;<sup>61</sup> and the pendency of other creditors' bills against the pledgor does not preclude the pledgee from maintaining an original

§ 53. Default by Pledgor

- a. In general
- b. Time of maturity fixed

a. In General

A present liability is presumed where no time is fixed for maturity of the principal obligation, and the pledgor will be in default on failure to pay or perform within a reasonable time after notice or after his having made performance impossible.

The pledgee has the right to exact strict performance of the contract.<sup>63</sup> Where no time is fixed for the maturity of the principal debt or obligation, the law will presume a present liability,<sup>64</sup> and the pledgor will be considered in default on his failure to pay or perform within a reasonable time after notice,<sup>65</sup> or after a reasonable time and after his having made performance impossible.<sup>66</sup>

b. Time of Maturity Fixed

Where a definite time for maturity is fixed, default occurs on failure to pay or perform by the time stated. If the principal obligation is payable on demand, default occurs on failure to pay on demand.

If a definite time for maturity is fixed, the pledgor will be in default on failure to pay or perform by the time stated,<sup>67</sup> unless such time has been extended by the pledgee, in which case the pledge cannot be sold until the expiration of the extension;<sup>68</sup> and if the extension is indefinite as to time the pledgor is not in default until a reasonable time after demand and notice.<sup>69</sup> Where the extension is conditional on the payment of interest, the pledgee may sell on default in the payment of interest and notice to the pledgor of that fact.<sup>70</sup> Where bonds are pledged as security for the payment of a note which is in turn pledged as security to pay certain acceptances, the time when the pledgee might sell the bonds is determined by the maturity of the note, and not of the acceptances.<sup>71</sup>

If the principal obligation is payable on demand, the pledgor will be in default on his failure to pay on demand;<sup>72</sup> and where, on such demand, a part payment only is made it constitutes a default;<sup>73</sup> and the fact that the pledgee agrees not to press the demand without notice does not constitute a waiver of his rights to sell the collateral after notice.<sup>74</sup>

§ 54. Proceeds and Surplus

- a. Application of proceeds to debt
- b. Distribution among claims secured
- c. Disbursements and charges
- d. Right to surplus
- e. Proceedings

a. Application of Proceeds to Debt

The rights of the parties to the proceeds of a pledge depend on the terms of the contract. Generally the proceeds must be applied exclusively to the debt secured.

Subject to the rules which govern the debts or liabilities secured by a pledge, the rights of the parties as to the application of the proceeds of a pledge, to particular debts or liabilities, must be determined by the terms of the pledge as they existed at the time of the sale or collection,<sup>75</sup> and the application will be made as of that date.<sup>76</sup> Before

Acceleration of maturity

Where plaintiff made demand for payment of delinquent interest installments on note, payees had right to exercise option of accelerating maturity of note as provided therein and, having done so, to sell collateral security pledged to secure payment of note.—Faulk v. Futch, Civ.App., 209 S.W.2d 1008, affirmed 214 S.W.2d 614, 147 Tex. 253, 5 A.L.R.2d 963.

Postponing maturity

Where maturity dates of notes secured are fixed, collateral securities do not suspend the remedy on secured indebtedness unless such is the agreement of the parties expressed in collateral instrument or clearly to be deduced from its terms.—Turner v. Pugh, Civ.App., 195 S.W.2d 374, reversed on other grounds 197 S.W.2d 822, 145 Tex. 292, 172 A.L.R. 707.

Application of amortization payments

U.S.—In re Prudence Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 88 F.2d 420.

76. Ill.—Stokes v. Frazier, 72 Ill. 428.

a pledgee may apply the proceeds of securities held as collateral he must give the pledgor notice to redeem;<sup>77</sup> and where collections are made in installments, in the absence of a special agreement, a pledgee of securities to secure payment of a call or demand loan cannot apply to the payment of the loan money received on collections of collaterals as they fall due, but must hold the proceeds as a substitute for the collateral collected.<sup>78</sup>

To what debts applied. As a general rule, on a sale or collection of the collateral security, the proceeds must be applied to the debt or debts it was given to secure, and to no others,<sup>79</sup> and the pledgee is entitled to retain only as much of the proceeds as is necessary to satisfy such debt or debts.<sup>80</sup> In accordance with this rule the pledgee, in the application of the proceeds to his secured debt, takes precedence over the general creditors of the pledgor,<sup>81</sup> and where the pledgor, after delivery of the collateral, has made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, the pledgee is still entitled to apply the proceeds of the collateral to the debts it was given to secure, to the exclusion of other claims.<sup>82</sup>

Joint or several debts. Proceeds of collateral pledged for a joint debt may not be applied in payment of an individual debt of one of the debtors;<sup>83</sup> but the mere fact that the proceeds of separate securities held for different debts are applied in each case to the wrong debt is immaterial where neither security brings enough to satisfy the smaller debt.<sup>84</sup>

As to third person. Where the pledge is given to secure the pledgee and also a third person, the pledgee, in disposing of the collateral and applying the proceeds, is charged with a trust in favor of such third person.<sup>85</sup>

Right of purchaser to retain purchase money for debt. Where the pledged property is sold, the purchaser is not entitled to retain a part of the purchase money in satisfaction of a debt due him by the pledgor;<sup>86</sup> and, where the pledgee acts in ignorance of the facts, he is not estopped to recover the sum retained by the purchaser by reason of his having credited such sum to him<sup>87</sup> or by reason of his inability to place the parties in statu quo.<sup>88</sup>

b. Distribution among Claims Secured

If the pledge secures several obligations, the pledgee may generally apply the proceeds according to his judgment; but the contract may prescribe the manner of distribution.

In accordance with the rules relating to the application of payments in general, in the absence of express direction regarding such application or reservation of right of direction by the owner of the collateral, the pledgee may apply the collateral to any debt within the pledge that he may deem most precarious, or as his judgment may dictate,<sup>89</sup> or the debtor, on giving collateral security, may authorize the proceeds to be applied to the several debts or obligations, as the creditor may elect;<sup>90</sup> and, if the creditor acts in good faith, other creditors may not interfere with his application.<sup>91</sup> On the other hand, the debtor may expressly direct the application of the proceeds;<sup>92</sup> and where the collateral is delivered as security on the aggregate amount of several obligations, the proceeds, if insufficient to pay all, must be applied, pro rata, on each of the obligations.<sup>93</sup> Such direction, however, must be given in the original contract;<sup>94</sup> and if

at the time of the delivery of the collateral the debtor fails to exercise his right to direct the application of its proceeds he cannot do so afterward;<sup>95</sup> and the creditor may, at his election, apply the proceeds to the payment of any of the secured debts which are due at the time the money is received.<sup>96</sup>

In some jurisdictions this right of the creditor to determine the application is recognized whether the proceeds of the collateral are voluntarily paid to him or are collected by suit;<sup>97</sup> but in other jurisdictions it is confined to voluntary payments, and where collection is made through resort to legal proceedings the court will apply the proceeds to the different debts secured in accordance with equitable principles,<sup>98</sup> and, if the funds are insufficient to pay all the secured debts, will usually direct application, pro rata, on them;<sup>99</sup> and it has been held that a court of equity, after default, may direct the property to be sold and the proceeds applied, not only in payment of debts due, but also of debts not due.<sup>1</sup>

Mingled proceeds. Where pledgees mix the proceeds of goods belonging to one person with the proceeds of that of another person on which a third person has a claim, so that it is impossible to identify any specific part of the money in their hands as having been derived from the sale of either portion of the goods, and the funds resulting from these mingled assets are insufficient to pay both claims in full, they may be required to abate in proportion to the amount of their respective claims.<sup>2</sup>

The pledgee is entitled to allowance out of the proceeds for all proper charges and expenses of converting the security into money.

The pledgee is entitled to allowance out of the proceeds for all proper charges and expenses of converting the security into money,<sup>3</sup> including commissions where the pledgee is also a broker or factor<sup>4</sup> or where they are stipulated for in the contract of pledge,<sup>5</sup> and also including reasonable attorney's fees expended for that purpose,<sup>6</sup> particularly where there is an express stipulation for such fees,<sup>7</sup> together with such amount as he may reasonably have been required to expend in keeping and caring for the property pledged.<sup>8</sup> It has been held that these charges and expenses are first to be deducted from the gross proceeds, and the balance only applied to the principal debt.<sup>9</sup> The pledgee is not entitled to allowance for unreasonable expenditures in preserving the pledge<sup>10</sup> or its value;<sup>11</sup> nor is he entitled to the interest on the security as a bonus in addition to the payment of his debt.<sup>12</sup>

The surplus of collaterals sold or collected belong to the pledgor or owner of the pledged property, and the pledgee, if he retains it, holds as trustee for the pledgor or person entitled thereto.

The surplus proceeds of collaterals sold or collected after the satisfaction of debts for which they are security belong to the pledgor,<sup>14</sup> and, if retained by the pledgee, are held by him in trust for the pledgor or person entitled thereto,<sup>15</sup> or his estate,<sup>16</sup> to whom, or to whose order,<sup>17</sup> such surplus must be paid or accounted for on demand.<sup>18</sup> The pledgee cannot relieve himself of liability for such surplus by a transfer of the collateral which does not in fact constitute a sale.<sup>19</sup> If the pledgee, without the consent of the pledgor, buys the pledged collateral securities at his own sale and afterward collects them, he may be required in equity to account to the pledgor for the surplus after payment of his debt.<sup>20</sup> Where expressly authorized to do so, the pledgee may apply the surplus to satisfy other obligations of the debtor.<sup>21</sup>

Where a pledged note is delivered by the pledgee to the maker in exchange for another note, which is taken in payment of the collateral note, it constitutes a payment of the pledgor's debt, and his right to the surplus will not be affected by a subsequent reëxchange of such notes.<sup>22</sup>

Owner who is not pledgor. When the pledgor is not the owner of the collateral but has pledged it for his own debt, with<sup>23</sup> or without<sup>24</sup> the consent of the owner, the surplus proceeds are held by the pledgee for the owner, who, unless he has waived his rights,<sup>25</sup> is entitled to such surplus as against the pledgor<sup>26</sup> or any other person claiming under the pledgor.<sup>27</sup> It has been held that, where the surplus is realized from collaterals, part of which belonged to the pledgor and part to a third person, the latter may claim the entire surplus and not merely the proportion realized on the property,<sup>28</sup> but that, where the property of several owners is wrongfully pledged to several pledgees, each owner is entitled only to the surplus which accrues from his property.<sup>29</sup>

Accounting on cash basis

Where pledgee was answerable for amount he received in excess of amount of pledgor's indebtedness, because of pledgee's wrongfully conducted sale of pledged mortgage, pledgee, who subsequently foreclosed the mortgage, purchased at foreclosure sale, and sold property purchased, was required to account on a cash basis, even though pledgee accepted a mortgage for greater part of purchase price of the property.—Huntingdon Valley Trust Co. v. Norristown-Penn Trust Co., 196 A. 821, 329 Pa. 356.

Amount

(1) A pledgor who had authorized the pledgee to sell collateral security is entitled to the difference between the gross sales price less the selling expenses, and the amount applied in satisfaction of the indebtedness, plus interest on such difference from the time of sale.—Dow v. Brookline Trust Co., 31 N.E.2d 13, 308 Mass. 90.

(2) Where assignments of accounts receivable had been given by defendant as security for money lent on payment by defendant of amount of judgment for money lent, he would be entitled to a reassignment of all uncollected accounts held by plaintiff, together with amounts received by plaintiff subsequently to late parties agreed the auditor should determine amount of the indebtedness.—Weiss v. Balaban, 53 N.E.2d 83, 315 Mass. 390.

(3) Seller holding mortgage notes due buyer from sale of his old car, as security for note given in payment of new car, by selling old car canceled notes entitling buyer to credit for them, notwithstanding he consented to sale; but the buyer is entitled to credit limited to face of notes, notwithstanding seller sold car for greater amount.—Bezanson v. Wray-Dickinson, Inc., 140 So. 255, 19 La.App. 788.

Assignees of pledgee

Indorser on note who paid maker's indebtedness to payee bank and acquired collateral deposited with bank was accountable to maker's assignee for any excess received on sale of collateral above debt, interest, and costs of sale.—Pilcher v. Continental Trust Co., 69 F.2d 987, 63 App.D.C. 111.

Sufficiency of accounting

Return of note to debtor, with notation thereon that note was paid, and that collateral had been sold for amount of note and interest, was sufficient accounting by pledgee, who owed debtor no duty to inform him of subsequent sale of note as collateral by purchaser.—Williams v. ## e. Proceedings

Surplus proceeds may be recovered by the pledgor or other person entitled thereto in appropriate proceedings brought for that purpose.

The pledgor may recover the surplus proceeds of the collateral in an action brought for that purpose,<sup>30</sup> although he is not the actual owner thereof;<sup>31</sup> but such recovery cannot be had in a proceeding in which it is not in issue.<sup>32</sup> On a sale of the pledge with his consent, he may sue the purchaser or his assignee to recover the balance due,<sup>33</sup> and if the pledgee refuses to pay over the surplus to the pledgor he may be held liable in an action for conversion;<sup>34</sup> and where the pledgee asserts a right, and is threatening to apply the proceeds of a collateral to the payment of a debt not secured thereby, the pledgor may sue in equity for relief.<sup>35</sup> Such surplus may not be recovered by the pledgor in an action in trover.<sup>36</sup> Where the pledge is given to secure several obligations in a prescribed order, if sufficient money is collected to satisfy all the obligations, the pledgor is not required to wait until a senior obligation is paid before suing to have the proceeds applied to a junior obligation.<sup>37</sup> The pledgor may be entitled to a complete accounting even though he is not entitled to a settlement at the time of the accounting.<sup>38</sup>

By assignee of pledgor or owner. An assignee of the pledgor's interest in the property pledged acquires the right to recover the surplus proceeds from the pledgee,<sup>39</sup> and where the pledgee sells the property with the assent of the assignee, in an action by the latter to recover the surplus proceeds, the pledgee can claim against such surplus only such an amount as, if tendered by the assignee at the time of the assignment, with interest and expenditures, would have canceled and discharged the pledgee's claim;<sup>40</sup> and hence, where the title to the property passes to the assignee prior to the sale by the pledgee, the title to the surplus, at the time of the sale, is vested in the assignee, and consequently the pledgee can set off no claim which he at that time held against the assignor.<sup>41</sup> The assignee of the executor of an insured person may sue an insurance company for the surplus due on a life insurance policy after the payment to the pledgee of the secured debt,<sup>42</sup> and the company is not entitled to set off expense incurred by it in resisting unfounded claims of other persons to such surplus.<sup>43</sup>

By real owner. The owner of property wrongfully pledged by one having it in possession, on the assignment of such pledgor for the benefit of creditors, may elect to ratify the pledge and look only to the pledgor's estate for satisfaction,<sup>44</sup> or he may file a claim for damages for the wrongful conversion against the assignee of the pledgor,<sup>45</sup> and he may also sue the pledgee for any surplus realized from the collateral after the payment of the debt it was pledged to secure,<sup>46</sup> and may maintain an action in equity against the pledgee for an accounting without first exhausting his legal remedy against the pledgor.<sup>47</sup> on collateral security, the pledgee may proceed against the pledgor personally on the debt or liability secured.

On default of the pledgor in the payment or discharge of the principal obligation, the pledgee, notwithstanding he has taken collateral security and has a lien thereon for his debt, may, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, proceed against the pledgor personally on the debt or liability secured,<sup>48</sup> and execution may be levied on the pledge and sale be made by the sheriff under a personal judgment, in such action.<sup>49</sup> This rule applies even though the collaterals were taken under an agreement not to sue on the debt for a limited time,<sup>50</sup> or under a mistaken belief that no personal liability would be enforced,<sup>51</sup> and even though the collateral is illegal.<sup>52</sup> If the pledgee proceeds first by sale of the pledged property, and the sale does not satisfy the debt, he may recover the balance due from the pledgor by an action at law.<sup>53</sup>

Recovery of interest. Where a pledgor claims a conversion of collaterals by the pledgee, and does not tender the balance of the debt, the pledgee is entitled to recover interest on such balance to the time of the trial.<sup>54</sup>

Liability for deficiency

(1) Elimination from printed note form of provision requiring makers to pay deficiency after sale of collateral did not release makers from liability for deficiency, in view of agreement in note to pay entire amount and interest and attorney's fees, and promise to deposit additional security if demanded.—McCune v. Harris, 50 P.2d 837, 9 Cal. App.2d 719.

(2) Sale of cotton given as security for note, made on default without notice to maker and as authorized in note without judicial action, did not defeat action on renewal note allegedly given without knowledge of the sale of security.—Farmerville Bank v. Tucker, La.App., 166 So. 491.

(3) Where collateral agreement provided that, out of the proceeds of any sale of collateral pledged to secure note, holder of note, after payment of all costs and expenses for making sale, should first pay off and satisfy note in full, and residue, if any, should be paid to the holder, and, in case of any deficiency, the making of the note agreed "promptly" to pay the note, maker of the note was liable for the balance due after the sale of the collateral and suit for its recovery could be maintained.—Mercantile-Commerce Bank & Trust Co. v. vent,<sup>58</sup> unless he has entered into a special agreement first to enforce the pledged collateral,<sup>59</sup> as where the agreement on the pledgor's part is merely to pay any deficiency,<sup>60</sup> or unless such enforcement is required by statute,<sup>61</sup> or unless the equities of the case are such as to require the pledgee to proceed first against the collateral.<sup>62</sup>

In accordance with the general rule, if action is commenced to enforce the security, the pledgee may discontinue it and proceed for judgment on the debt or obligation, if no right of the pledgor is forfeited.<sup>63</sup> Such suit may be brought by one to whom the debt has been assigned.<sup>64</sup>

Statute requiring chattel mortgage to be enforced before action can be maintained for the debt does not apply to pledges, and hence does not preclude a pledgee from suing for the debt without first resorting to the pledge.<sup>65</sup>

Unsuccessful attempt to enforce. A pledgee may also sue for the amount of the principal debt or obligation although he has sought to procure a sale of the pledge by judicial process, but has failed because of the pledge not being salable.<sup>66</sup>

c. Accounting for Pledge or Proceeds

As a general rule the pledgee in a suit on the principal debt or obligation is not bound to produce the collateral at the trial or to account for it.

As well as not being required to resort to the collateral pledged as a condition to suing on the debt, as a general rule the pledgee, in a suit on the principal obligation, is not bound to produce such collateral at the trial or to account for it,<sup>67</sup> especially where the collateral was not given with the obligation in suit, but in connection with a previous liability which constitutes the consideration for the principal obligation,<sup>68</sup> or where it has never been in the pledgee's possession or control,<sup>69</sup> or where it has been disposed of in good faith and in a lawful manner in an effort to realize all that was possible out of it.<sup>70</sup> Under some circumstances, however, a pledgee of collateral may be required to produce it as a condition to enforcing the obligation for which it is security.<sup>71</sup> Thus the pledgee must produce the collateral or its proceeds or account for its nonproduction where it is alleged or proved by defendant that the pledgee has realized on the collateral,<sup>72</sup> or that he has lost or misappropriated it,<sup>73</sup> or that the collateral was actually deposited and that plaintiff is unable to produce it;<sup>74</sup> and the pledgee cannot escape this duty by

A note, not directing, but merely authorizing, payee to sell collateral, pledged as security, on maker's default, did not require realization on collateral as condition precedent to recovery on note.—First Trust & Deposit Co. v. Potter, 278 N.Y.S. 847, 155 Misc. 106.

In Utah

(1) A pledge is not a mortgage within statute permitting only one action for recovery of debt or enforcement of right secured by mortgage.—Campbell v. Peter, 182 P.2d 754, 108 Utah 565.

(2) It is the duty of a holder of security pledged to secure note to exhaust the security before he can obtain a deficiency judgment against the indorser or maker, and the security holder cannot reasonably exhaust the security if at the foreclosure sale no one would buy it because he would not get a good title, because owner has not been joined.—Hoyt v. Upper Marion Ditch Co., 76 P.2d 234, 94 Utah 134.

(3) Secured creditor must first exhaust his security and can then proceed against debtor to collect balance due with no better rights than unsecured creditor would have.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Mallia, for Use and Benefit of Creditors of Provo Commercial & Savings Bank, 49 P.2d 954, 87 Utah 426.

(4) Under the statute relating to but one action on a debt secured by a mortgage on real or personal property, where a debt is secured by collateral in the absence of a showing that the security has become valueless, plaintiff cannot maintain an action for a personal judgment, without first exhausting the remedy against the security.—National Bank of Commerce v. James Pingree Co., 218 P. 552, 62 Utah 259.

showing that the collateral has become worthless.<sup>75</sup> It has also been held that, where the collateral is negotiable by the pledgee, he should produce it at the trial<sup>76</sup> unless he insists on proceeding after being charged with its face value.<sup>77</sup> It has been held, however, that, where the note in suit does not refer to collateral, although defendant had given plaintiff other notes as collateral, plaintiff is not bound as a condition to recovery to produce or restore the collateral on a plea alleging conversion of the collateral.<sup>78</sup>

Amount for which pledgee accountable. Where it becomes the duty of the pledgee, in an action for the principal debt or obligation, to account for the pledge if, acting strictly within his rights under the pledge, he has realized on the collateral on default of the pledgor, he must account for the amount actually received by him therefor,<sup>79</sup> and not for a higher price at which similar property is afterward sold between the date of delivery and commencement of the action.<sup>80</sup> Where he is guilty of conversion of the pledge, or of negligence in collecting or selling it, he must account not merely for the amount received for it, but for its full value;<sup>81</sup> but this does not affect his right to recover on the obligation of the pledgor to the extent that it exceeds such value.<sup>82</sup>

d. Defenses

- (1) In general
- (2) Set-off and counterclaim
- (3) Nonperformance of conditions precedent

(1) In General

In actions on the principal debt or obligation, various defenses may be interposed; but generally it is no defense that the creditor has taken or holds collateral security.

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the mere fact that the creditor has taken or holds collateral security is no defense to an action on the principal debt unless he has realized thereon;<sup>83</sup> nor does the taking of security of a higher nature operate as a merger of the original debt so as to bar a suit on the latter.<sup>84</sup> In the absence of any agreement it is no defense that the creditor has failed to sell collateral security although requested to do so,<sup>85</sup> but it is a good defense to such a suit that the creditor agreed to realize first on the collateral,<sup>86</sup> or that, aside from the collateral, the pledgor's personal estate is not sufficient to pay the debt, without resort to the realty.<sup>87</sup> In an action on a note, a person signing the note as a maker cannot impeach the unambiguous terms of a collateral agreement which he executed.<sup>88</sup>

Return of property. Where the right to return of the pledged property is asserted by the pledgor in a suit on the secured debt by the pledgee, the pledgor must show a tender of the indebtedness.<sup>89</sup>

(2) Set-Off and Counterclaim

Generally the pledgor may set off against the amount of the debt any profits or proceeds realized by the pledgee from the collateral, or any damages or loss resulting from the negligence or wrongful act of the pledgee with respect to the collateral.

As a general rule the pledgor defendant is entitled to set off against the amount of the debt any profits or proceeds realized by the pledgee plaintiff from the collateral,<sup>90</sup> and any damage or loss resulting from the negligence,<sup>91</sup> or any damage or

Lack of diligence

In action on notes given by con-

loss resulting from the wrongful sale,<sup>92</sup> or from other wrongful conversion or act<sup>93</sup> of the pledgee with respect to the collateral; and in some jurisdictions this rule applies although the damages for the wrongful act or conversion are unliquidated or uncertain.<sup>94</sup> The pledgor is not entitled to credit for notes pledged unless he shows that the pledgee was under the duty of collecting and applying them before suing on the principal debt;<sup>95</sup> and the giving of a new note by the pledgor without claiming credit for the conversion of collateral will constitute a waiver of his right to urge their loss or conversion as a defense.<sup>96</sup> A statutory provision for set-off in actions on a bond secured by a mortgage as collateral has been held not applicable in an action on a promissory note secured by a pledge of personal property.<sup>97</sup>

Depreciation in value. In the absence of negligence or other wrongful act of the pledgee, depreciation in the value of the collateral will not be allowed as a set-off.<sup>98</sup>

Amount of set-off. In accordance with the rule that the pledgee, in case of a conversion or negligent loss, must account for the actual value of the pledged property, the pledgor, in an action against him on the principal debt, may set off against the amount of the debt the actual value of the property,<sup>99</sup> with interest, in the discretion of the court or jury,<sup>1</sup> and not the highest value between the dates of the conversion and the trial.<sup>2</sup> In case of a sale, the pledgor may recoup the difference between the amount for which the pledged property was sold and the actual value on the date of sale.<sup>3</sup>

(3) Nonperformance of Conditions Precedent

Compliance with conditions precedent is essential to interposition of defenses or set-offs.

Tender or payment of the amount due on the principal debt is not a condition precedent to the pledgor's right to set off the value of collateral converted by the pledgee<sup>4</sup> or lost through his negligence.<sup>5</sup> However, it has been held that in a suit on certain notes defendant cannot avail himself of the defense that some of the notes sued on were delivered as security for the others without first paying the amount of his real indebtedness.<sup>6</sup>

e. Parties

Only proper and necessary parties should be joined in an action by the pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.

In an action by the pledgee on the principal debt or obligation, it is improper to join as defendants the maker of a note held as security and the pledgor,<sup>7</sup> and, in an action against the assignee of a mortgage on a debt to secure which the assignee signees for shipment of fertilizer where consignees delivered to consignor a number of farmer's notes which had theretofore been delivered to consignees for collection under a trust receipt, consignees were entitled not only to credit or set-off for sums collected on notes listed in receipt given at the time, but for any sums which could and should have been collected by reasonable diligence under the equitable rules defining the duty of the holder of collateral notes.—Hyatt v. International Agr. Corporation, 183 So. 670, 236 Ala. 527.

92. Ala.—Thompson v. Montgomery Fourth Nat. Bank, 108 So. 69, 214 Ala. 452.

49 C.J. p 991 note 30.

Who may counterclaim.

In an action on a note, if there was a wrongful sale of collateral securing defendant's note, the damage accruing would be as for a conversion, and would have existed in favor of the maker pledgor alone, and not in favor of the indorser guaranteeing payment of the note.—Williams v. Parker, 157 P. 550, 30 Cal. App. 71.

Refusal to return after tender

Where pledgor has tendered amount due on note, secured by pledged collateral, with costs, on condition that pledgee return pledged property, after commencement of action on note, pledgee, refusing to accept such tender, could be charged with value of property as credit on note.—*First Trust & Deposit Co. v. erty securing note and elected to hold property as security against possible obligation on another note executed by pledgor and signed by pledgee as surety, pledgee, bringing action on former note, was guilty of conversion and was liable to pledgor for value of property as of date of conversion.—*Leleux v. had deposited the mortgage as security, the mortgagee is not a necessary party.<sup>8</sup>

f. Pleading

The rules of pleading in civil actions are applicable in actions by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.

The general rules of pleading apply in an action by the pledgee on the principal debt or obligation, as to the declaration or petition,<sup>9</sup> or answer or plea,<sup>10</sup> such as the rule that, where the answer fails to set up a defense, a verdict or judgment for plaintiff may be rendered on the pleadings.<sup>11</sup>

Misfeasance by pledgee. A general allegation that the pledgee has failed properly to keep or enforce the pledge is insufficient; specific acts of misfeasance must be averred.<sup>12</sup>

Issues, proof, and variance. The general rules of pleading also apply as to issues, proof, and variance.<sup>13</sup> The pledgor will usually be allowed to prove a conversion of the collateral by the pledgee, or his negligence in realizing on it and applying the proceeds to the payment of the debt, under a plea of non assumpsit<sup>14</sup> or of payment.<sup>15</sup> The defense of damages from the loss of collateral security is the set-off of one cause of action against another, and must be specially pleaded;<sup>16</sup> and the pledgee will not be obliged to account for nonnegotiable securities held in pledge unless the answer of defendant alleges that they have been lost or converted.<sup>17</sup> The defense that the debt is not yet due must be directly alleged,<sup>18</sup> as must also the defense of payment of the debt out of the proceeds of property pledged,<sup>19</sup> or of an agreement whereby the pledgee has waived his right to sell the pledge on default.<sup>20</sup>

g. Evidence

The general rules of evidence are applicable in an action by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.

The general rules of evidence apply in an action by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation, in respect of the burden of proof and presumptions.<sup>21</sup> On an issue raised by defendant as to the conversion or loss of collaterals by the pledgee, the burden of proof is on the pledgee to account for them;<sup>22</sup> but, having done so, the burden is on defendant to prove a conversion.<sup>23</sup> The burden is on the pledgor to show absence of good faith on the part of the pledgee in making a sale of the pledge,<sup>24</sup> or to establish his contention that the pledge was worth more than it sold for,<sup>25</sup> or to establish the value of the pledge which the pledgee refused to sell, in order to recover a judgment canceling his note.<sup>26</sup> Likewise the burden is on defendant to

Counterclaim

Pledgor, setting up counterclaim or set-off for damage suffered by pledgee's neglect with respect to collateral, must plead facts constituting negligence and rendering collateral worthless, and also his damage.—Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 53 P.2d 116, 101 Mont. 117.

Proof of damage in recoupment

(1) In suit on note, accommodation indorsers had burden of proving damages in recoupment for payee's failure to sell collateral deposited by indorsers.—Bank of U. S. v. Thomson & Kelly Co., 195 N.E. 115, 290 Mass. 224.

(2) In payee's suit on note, indorsers were not entitled to recoupment for damages for payee's failure to sell collateral deposited by indorsers, where there was no evidence showing lesser market value for collateral at later date than on date when payee was allegedly obliged to sell collateral.—Bank of U. S. v. Thomson & Kelly Co., supra.

26. Tex.—Leleux v. Serafino, Civ. App., 88 S.W.2d 1100.

prove alleged usury<sup>27</sup> or payment.<sup>28</sup> Where the pledgee has failed to restore the pledge, the burden is on him to show that it has been lost or destroyed<sup>29</sup> and that he unsuccessfully used all necessary care and diligence to preserve it.<sup>30</sup> On the issue of the loss of the pledged property by theft, the burden is on the pledgee to show that the loss occurred without fault on his part.<sup>31</sup> The pledgor seeking to counterclaim for damage suffered because of the pledgee's neglect with respect to the collateral has the burden of proving negligence<sup>32</sup> and damage.<sup>33</sup>

Admissibility. The general rules which govern the competency, relevancy, and materiality of the evidence in civil actions are applicable in an action by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.<sup>34</sup> Evidence of the willingness of the maker to secure a note pledged as collateral is not admissible in the absence of a showing of negligence or wrongful conduct on the part of the pledgee.<sup>35</sup> Any evidence of a settlement or other conduct of defendant inconsistent with his assertion of a set-off or counterclaim is admissible.<sup>36</sup> On an issue of payment of the principal debt by the sale of collateral, parol evidence is admissible to show that the collateral was also held as security for another debt,<sup>37</sup> but parol evidence is not admissible as to debts due plaintiff for which the collateral was not held as security.<sup>38</sup>

Weight and sufficiency. General rules governing the weight and sufficiency of the evidence are applicable in an action by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.<sup>39</sup> Testimony that plaintiff said he did not have the collateral when defendant offered to pay the debt authorizes an inference of conversion,<sup>40</sup> and such inference is not conclusively rebutted by testimony of plaintiff's agent that, if plaintiff ever received the collateral, it had been lost or misplaced and had never been sold.<sup>41</sup>

h. Trial

The general rules of trial of civil actions apply to actions by a pledgee on the principal debt or obligation.

The general rules of trial apply in respect of questions of law and fact<sup>42</sup> and instructions to the jury.<sup>43</sup> Thus, where the evidence is conflicting or of a doubtful nature, it is generally a question for the jury whether certain property is held by the pledgee as collateral security<sup>44</sup> or whether the pledgee has committed a specific wrongful act with respect to the property.<sup>45</sup> Where, in a suit against the pledgee for a balance due after the sale of the pledged property by him, competent evidence does not sustain a charge of the pledgee's fraud and negligence in such sale, a motion for a verdict for plaintiff should be granted.<sup>46</sup> The value of the property pledged may be a question for the jury.<sup>47</sup>

i. Judgment

A judgment in an action on the principal debt or obligation does not affect the pledgee's lien on the collateral security, and need not, but may in a proper case, provide for return of the collateral on satisfaction of the judgment.

The recovery of a judgment does not affect plaintiff's lien on the collateral security,<sup>48</sup> and the

Presumptions

On counterclaim or set-off by pledgor for damage suffered through pledgee's neglect with respect to collateral, negligence and loss may not be presumed from mere fact that collateral remains uncollected, but presumptions are that person is ignorant of wrong, that private transactions have been fair and regular, and that ordinary course of business has been followed, burden to overcome which rests on counterclaimant.—Rock Island Plow Co. v. judgment need not provide for surrender of the pledge on satisfaction of the judgment;<sup>49</sup> but where defendant establishes that he has fully paid his indebtedness it is proper to order that his collateral be returned to him.<sup>50</sup> In a suit on notes secured by collateral, it has been held improper for the decree directing sale of the collateral to permit the pledgee to purchase at the sale, where such purchase would be invalid if made without the pledgor's consent.<sup>51</sup>

Relief against judgment. The pledgor, on paying the amount of a judgment on the principal debt into court, will be entitled to an order that no execution issue until the return of the collateral.<sup>52</sup> He will not be entitled to enjoin execution on the judgment on the mere allegation of irregularities in the enforcement of the collateral.<sup>53</sup>

§ 56. Sale of Pledged Property

Questions relating to the sale of pledged property as a means of enforcing the pledge are discussed infra §§ 57-66.

§ 57. — Right and Duty to Sell

- a. Right to sell
- b. Duty to sell

a. Right to Sell

- (1) In general
- (2) Nature and extent of right in general
- (3) As to choses in action pledged
- (4) By and against whom right enforceable
- (5) Waiver or loss of right

(1) In General

As a general rule, on default of the pledgor on the principal debt or obligation, it becomes the right and the privilege of the pledgee to sell the pledged property without judicial process.

The old rule required a judicial decree to warrant a sale by the pledgee unless there was a special agreement to the contrary;<sup>54</sup> but, except in some jurisdictions where the pledge consists of a chose in action, it has long been a well settled rule that, on default by the pledgor in the performance of the principal obligation and in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, it becomes the right and the privilege of the pledgee, in order to satisfy the debt or obligation, to sell the pledged property<sup>55</sup>

Lien law inapplicable

A pledgee's contract right to sell collateral pledged to secure loan without notice to defaulting pledgor is not governed by statute relating to sale of personalty to satisfy lien.—In re Kiamie's Estate, 76 N.Y.S. 2d 684, 191 Misc. 179.

Sale of pledge after resort to principal security

(1) A creditor, making no attempt to secure personal judgment against debtor for unpaid balance of debt after resorting to principal security therefor by exercising power of sale in trust deed of realty, but merely seeking to realize on additional security held under pledge agreement and another trust deed, need not bring action under statute for personal deficiency judgment against debtor.—Hatch v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, 120 P.2d 869, 19 Cal.2d 254.

(2) The statute is concerned only with actions to recover deficiency judgments after exhaustion of security, and sales of personalty and realty under pledge agreement and trust deed, given by individuals as additional security for estate's indebtedness principally secured by prior trust deed, were not invalid because of failure to sue for deficiency judgment after resort to principal security.—Hatch v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, supra.

Power to option

While a power of sale does not ordinarily include a power to option, since the granting of an option to purchase precludes exercise of the power of sale while option lasts, a without judicial process,<sup>56</sup> provided he complies with conditions designed to protect the rights of the pledgor,<sup>57</sup> unless the character of the property is such as to raise a presumption that the parties intended that it should be used in some other way to raise money, if necessary,<sup>58</sup> or other matter renders it inequitable to make a sale.<sup>59</sup> Under some statutes the pledgee cannot sell the property in the absence of a special power of sale.<sup>60</sup> Under other statutes, unless the pledgor consents to the sale, the pledgee cannot sell the pledged property except by judicial process after he has obtained a judgment against the pledgor.<sup>61</sup>

Sales of pledges are frequently controlled by the law applicable to mortgages.<sup>62</sup>

(2) Nature and Extent of Right in General

The right to sell may be given expressly by the contract of pledge, but it also exists as an incident to, or as implied from, the contract independently of any provision. It can be exercised only to satisfy a debt in default which the property was pledged to secure.

The right to sell the property, on default, is sometimes expressly conferred by the contract of pledge,<sup>63</sup> in which case the terms of the contract are binding on the parties and must be strictly pursued;<sup>64</sup> but an agreement by which the pledgee binds himself not to dispose of the collateral will usually be construed so as not to deprive him of the right to sell after default.<sup>65</sup> Even in the absence of a provision for sale in the contract, the right of the pledgee to sell exists as an incident to, or as implied from, the contract of pledge and as a part of the security,<sup>66</sup> unless an express agreement to the contrary is affirmatively shown.<sup>67</sup> The pledgee may sell the property as his own<sup>68</sup> or have another dispose of it for his benefit;<sup>69</sup> and the property may be sold whether it belongs to the pledgor or to another who pledged it for his security.<sup>70</sup> The pledged property may be sold only in satisfaction of a debt in default, which it was pledged to secure;<sup>71</sup> and, where the property is of a divisible nature, only as much thereof may be sold as is necessary to satisfy the debt,<sup>72</sup> unless the contract expressly authorizes a sale of all, if any part of the liability is unpaid.<sup>73</sup> Where other property is substituted for the original pledge, the right to sell attaches to the substituted property.<sup>74</sup>

pledgee with power of sale may resort to other lawful means of realizing on pledged collateral, even though pledge contract expressly authorizes sale only, and his power of sale must be interpreted with eye to its purpose and should carry such incidental powers, including power to option, as make for advantage of both parties to pledge.—*Buder v. ### (3) As to Choses in Action Pledged

In some jurisdictions commercial paper held in pledge may be sold, but generally such paper or choses in action, with certain exceptions, may not be sold in the absence of express authorization but must be held and collected as they become due.

In a few jurisdictions the doctrine prevails that a pledgee, on default of the pledgor, may sell commercial paper which he holds in pledge;<sup>77</sup> but, in most jurisdictions, as an exception to his right to sell on default, a pledgee who holds commercial paper or other choses in action other than stocks and bonds of a corporation and the like may not, on the pledgor's default, sell them for the purpose of satisfying his debt or obligation,<sup>78</sup> unless he is expressly authorized to do so;<sup>79</sup> but must hold and collect them as they become due, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt secured.<sup>80</sup> This rule has been expressly enacted by some statutes, but such a provision is for the benefit of the pledgor who may waive it.<sup>81</sup> Where, however, bonds having a long time to run are pledged as security for a short-time loan, it would be unreasonable to require the pledgee to wait until their maturity to realize on his security and he may accordingly sell them at public auction on default and notice.<sup>82</sup> It has also been held that, where a debtor pledges his own mortgage bond as collateral security, the pledgee, having the right to receive and hold such a pledge, with the power to sell, has also the right to exercise such power.<sup>83</sup>

(4) By and against Whom Right Enforceable

The right of sale may be enforced by the pledgee or his assignee, or personal representative, against the pledgor, his receiver, or other person claiming through the pledgor.

The right of sale may be enforced not only by the pledgee but also by his assignee,<sup>84</sup> unless restricted by positive stipulation;<sup>85</sup> and on his death it survives to his personal representatives.<sup>86</sup> Where all the preliminaries are performed in the name of the pledgee, the mere act of selling may be performed through an agent;<sup>87</sup> but the power to make the sale cannot be delegated by the pledgee to another, unless the contract so provides.<sup>88</sup>

Against whom. The right to sell pledged property may be enforced not only against the pledgor,<sup>89</sup> but also against the receiver,<sup>90</sup> or the assignee of the pledgor for the benefit of creditors,<sup>91</sup> and all other persons claiming through the pledgor.<sup>92</sup>

A pledgee may waive his right to sell the pledged property on default of the pledgor,<sup>93</sup> and the waiver requires no new or independent consideration to support it.<sup>94</sup> The waiver may be express or implied,<sup>95</sup> and may arise from the pledgee's act in extending the time for payment of the principal debt,<sup>96</sup> except where it is apparent from the circumstances of the extension for an indefinite time that no waiver was intended.<sup>97</sup> The pledgee's right of sale is not waived or lost by the pledgor's assignment of the pledged property to a third person,<sup>98</sup> even though the pledgee has notice thereof;<sup>99</sup> nor is it merged in a judgment obtained on the principal debt.<sup>1</sup>

(b) Revocation of Power of Sale

The right to sell is a power coupled with an interest and is not revocable at the will of the pledgor.

The right of the pledgee to sell is not a mere naked power,<sup>2</sup> but is a power coupled with an interest,<sup>3</sup> and as such is not revocable at the will of the pledgor;<sup>4</sup> nor is it revoked by the pledgor's insolvency, or bankruptcy,<sup>5</sup> or death.<sup>6</sup>

b. Duty to Sell

While the pledgee has the right to sell, in the absence of a special agreement, he may or may not sell at his option, and the pledgor cannot make it the duty of the pledgee to sell by directing or requesting him to do so.

Although the pledgee, for the pledgor's default, is entitled to sell the collateral, in the absence of a special agreement, he may or may not sell at his option,<sup>7</sup> and is under no legal obligation to make a sale,<sup>8</sup> and is not liable for a depreciation in value of the property after the failure to sell;<sup>9</sup> but is liable only for damages resulting from bad faith<sup>10</sup> or negligence.<sup>11</sup>

Request for return of security

Under some collateral agreements, pledgor of security may notify the pledgee to sell and apply the security to the debt for which it was pledged, but pledgor has no action against an unaccommodating pledgee because of the latter's refusal to grant a request to return the security so that it may be sold, and the fact that holder of note, with whom stocks were pledged by indorsers as security, refused to permit sale of security and its application on debt and waited four years thereafter before attempting foreclosure of security, did not affect holder's rights against indorsers.—Hoyt v. Upper Marion Ditch Co., 76 P.2d 234, 94 Utah 134.

a. Necessity

As a general rule, before selling collateral the pledgee must demand payment and give reasonable notice and opportunity for redemption of the pledge.

As a general rule the pledgee is not entitled to sell the collateral on default in the payment of the principal debt by the pledgor until he has demanded payment of the pledgor,<sup>17</sup> or of his personal representative,<sup>18</sup> or authorized agent;<sup>19</sup> and has given him reasonable notice and opportunity to redeem the pledge.<sup>20</sup> A demand for payment is required, although the debt is payable presently and without demand,<sup>21</sup> and although the pledge agreement stipulates that the pledgee may sell at public or private sale without notice to the pledgor.<sup>22</sup>

Such a demand and notice to redeem, however, are not necessary where the pledgor has expressly agreed that the pledgee may sell without demand<sup>23</sup>

Demand for payment or additional collateral

(1) Where demand note provided for calls by payee for additional collateral and sale of collateral deposited "upon default of payment at maturity . . . without any previous demand, advertisement or notice," the note itself indicated that a demand either for payment or for additional collateral was contemplated by the parties as essential before conferring on payee the right to sell the collateral.—Heimpel v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Bethlehem, 12 A.2d 28, 337 Pa. 425.

(2) Debtor's payment in advance, of interest to date of maturity, did not deprive creditor of right to accelerate maturity under note permitting acceleration if security should become unsatisfactory.—Atkinson v. Bank of Manhattan Trust Co., C.C.A.Wis., 69 F.2d 735.

22. N.Y.—Wilson v. Little, 2 N.Y. 443, 51 Am.D. 307.

Assignee

Judgment requiring assignee of pledgee, who had executed satisfaction of mortgage given as collateral, to assign mortgage to pledgor, on payment of pledgor's indebtedness, with authorization to pledgee's assignee to sell mortgage after notice in event of pledgor's failure to make payment, should be modified by striking out provision for notice, where collateral agreement authorized sale of collateral on default without notice or demand.—Fairchild Sons v. Gesecus, 285 N.Y.S. 49, 246 App.Div. 843.

or has otherwise waived demand.<sup>24</sup> It has also been held that, where the debt is payable at a fixed date, unless it has been indefinitely extended,<sup>25</sup> a demand of payment before sale is not necessary<sup>26</sup> provided notice of the sale is given,<sup>27</sup> since such notice is regarded as equivalent to a demand.<sup>28</sup>

Inability to make demand. The inability of the pledgee to make a demand does not entitle him to sell without a demand,<sup>29</sup> but, as discussed infra § 67, the disposition of the pledge should be authorized and sanctioned by judicial proceedings.

b. Sufficiency

No particular formality is required in making a demand for payment.

In making a demand of payment of the pledgor it is not necessary that the word "demand" be used;<sup>30</sup> it is sufficient that any means be used to press and urge the pledgor to pay the debt secured<sup>31</sup> or that the pledgee signifies to the pledgor his desire for payment in such a manner as to be equivalent to a request.<sup>32</sup> It is not essential to such demand that the collateral be there produced or be shown to be in the possession of the pledgee.<sup>33</sup>

§ 59. — Notice of Sale

a. Necessity

b. To whom given

c. Requisites and sufficiency

d. Waiver

a. Necessity

(1) To pledgor

(2) To public

(1) To Pledgor

Where default continues after demand and notice to redeem, the pledgee, as a general rule, must, before sale, give the pledgor reasonable notice of the time and place of sale, or such notice as may be required by the contract or by statute.

If, after a demand and notice to redeem, the pledgor continues in default, the pledgee, as a general rule, cannot make a valid sale of the collateral without first giving to the pledgor reasonable notice of the time and place of sale,<sup>34</sup> or the notice prescribed by statute,<sup>35</sup> or by the contract of pledge,<sup>36</sup> unless the giving of such notice is waived by the pledgor or is dispensed with by statute;<sup>37</sup> and some statutes expressly regulate the matter of giving such notice.<sup>38</sup> This rule is especially applicable where the pledgor has been led to believe that the collateral will not be sold without actual notice to him.<sup>39</sup> It has been said that notice of sale is required even though demand for payment may have been waived or become unnecessary.<sup>40</sup>

Effect of failure to give notice. A sale without reasonable or the prescribed notice to the pledgor,

Definiteness of waiver

A note authorizing sale of collateral "upon the nonperformance of this promise," without demanding payment of note and without any advertisement, notice of intention to sell, or of time or place of sale, was sufficiently definite to constitute waiver of demand for payment.—Berry v. Neuhardt, 183 S.E. 858, 117 W.Va. 67.

as required by this rule, in the absence of waiver, is invalid,<sup>41</sup> and, as discussed infra § 63, constitutes a conversion of the property for which the pledgee is liable. Only the pledgor, however, may make objection to a failure to give notice.<sup>42</sup>

A custom that, under certain circumstances, the pledged property may be sold without notice cannot be availed of in direct variance to the general rule requiring notice.<sup>43</sup>

Where title in pledgee. Where the title to the property is in the pledgee, he may sell without notice independently of the contract of pledge.<sup>44</sup>

Excuse for failure to give notice. The inability of the pledgee to give notice of the time and place of sale does not entitle him to sell without notice<sup>45</sup> unless such inability has been caused by act of the pledgor.<sup>46</sup>

(2) To Public

Where a public sale is required, the public must be given due notice.

Where, as discussed infra § 60, the sale is required to be made by public auction, notice thereof, by due advertisement, must also be given to the public.<sup>47</sup> Even where the pledge contract authorizes the pledgee to sell at public or private sale without notice to the pledgor, notice by advertisement must be given to the public where the sale is made by public auction,<sup>48</sup> but not where a private sale is made.<sup>49</sup>

b. To Whom Given

Generally the notice must be given to the pledgor personally, or to his proper representative, even though he is not the owner of the property pledged; and the owner in such case is not entitled to notice.

The notice of sale must be given to the pledgor in person<sup>50</sup> or to his authorized agent;<sup>51</sup> or in case of his death, to his personal representative.<sup>52</sup>

Where the pledgor is not the owner of the property pledged, the pledgor only is entitled to notice of sale,<sup>53</sup> and not the real owner of the property,<sup>54</sup> unless the pledgee has notice of his ownership.<sup>55</sup>

A third person who is not the owner of the pledged property is not entitled to notice of an intended sale thereof,<sup>56</sup> although he has an interest therein,<sup>57</sup> especially where the sale is made by direction of the owner.<sup>58</sup>

c. Requisites and Sufficiency

Generally the notice must inform the pledgor that a sale is to be made, and the time and place of the sale; but, except as required by statute, no particular formality is necessary.

Purpose or object of notice

The purpose of notice to pledgor of sale of collateral by pledgee is to give pledgor an opportunity to redeem and to be present at sale to see that it is fairly conducted and that property is disposed of to best advantage.—In re Kiamie's Estate, 76 N.Y.S.2d 684, 191 Misc. 179—Jacobs v. National Bank of Far Rockaway, 13 N.Y.S.2d 60.

Necessity for personal notice

Under the rule discussed in Notice § 18 c, that, where the giving of notice is required without provision as to the method, actual notice is essential, a statute requiring pledgor to be given written notice of public sale of pledged property by pledgee was not complied with and sale was void, where written notice was mailed to pledgor at his last known address instead of being delivered to him personally.—*Valley Nat. 58. La.—Alexandria Bank, etc., Co. v. Honeycutt, supra.

The notice must inform the pledgor, or his agent or personal representative, that a sale is to be made of the pledged property,<sup>59</sup> and generally must inform him of the time and place of sale,<sup>60</sup> and must be given a reasonable time before sale so that the pledgor may have an opportunity to protect his interests.<sup>61</sup> The names of the pledgor and pledgee may be omitted if the pledgor understands that the property to be sold is his.<sup>62</sup>

Except where the manner in which the notice shall be given is prescribed by statute,<sup>63</sup> it is not required that the notice shall be given in a formal manner.<sup>64</sup> The notice must be of the character prescribed by the statute.<sup>65</sup> Except where public notice is required,<sup>66</sup> it is sufficient that notice is sent by mail to the pledgor's post office,<sup>67</sup> or is left at his place of business, in his absence, with a person in charge thereof,<sup>68</sup> or that knowledge that the sale is to be made is brought home to the pledgor.<sup>69</sup>

Notice to the public, when given, should be given in the usual and customary manner for public sales at the place where the sale is to be made,<sup>70</sup> allowing sufficient time and stating sufficient facts to enable the public to make an intelligent investigation of the title and value of the pledged property to be sold.<sup>71</sup> Where such statements are not usual, it is not necessary for the notice to state that the property was pledged or that it was the property of the pledgor.<sup>72</sup>

- (1) Of notice of sale
- (2) Of right to sell without notice

(1) Of Notice of Sale

The pledgor may waive his right to have notice of the sale, as by express stipulation in the contract of pledge.

The pledgor may waive his right to have notice of the sale<sup>73</sup> unless the statute requiring notice makes a waiver inoperative.<sup>74</sup> Such waiver may be made by the express consent of the pledgor to a sale with-

Waiver after ineffective notice

Technically, a notice of sale could no longer effectively constitute public notice after adjournment, and a further notice by publication should have been given before actual date of sale but, where the pledgor specifically waived any right to object to the sale on such ground, he could not subsequently contend that the sale was improper because of any irregularity as to publication.—General Phoenix Corp. v. Cabot, 89 N.E. 2d 238, 300 N.Y. 87.

out notice,<sup>75</sup> notwithstanding a statutory provision authorizing a private sale and prescribing the notice to be given in such cases;<sup>76</sup> or it may be implied from the surrounding circumstances.<sup>77</sup>

By express stipulation. The general rule requiring a pledgee to give notice of the sale of the pledged property is subject to such other agreements as the parties may make;<sup>78</sup> and, unless there is a statutory provision to the contrary,<sup>79</sup> the right of the pledgor to notice of sale may be waived by an express stipulation to that effect in the contract of pledge;<sup>80</sup> and, where the pledgor, at the time of making the pledge, waives notice of sale, he may not, after the sale of the pledge, complain of want of notice;<sup>81</sup> nor in such a case is the pledgee bound to notify the pledgor of the grounds on which he exercises the power of sale.<sup>82</sup> A stipulation in the contract authorizing the pledgee to make a public or private sale has been held to authorize him to sell without notice of the time or place of sale;<sup>83</sup> but there is also some authority to the contrary.<sup>84</sup> A waiver stipulation that the pledged property may be sold either at public or private sale without notice applies only to notice to the pledgor of a private sale,<sup>85</sup> and, if the pledgee elects to sell at public sale, he must give public notice thereof.<sup>86</sup> Although the agreement provides for public or private sale without notice, where notice of public sale is given, the pledgor is entitled to assume that a public sale will be had.<sup>87</sup>

Without further notice. An agreement authorizing a sale, on default, without further notice, waives notice of the time and place of sale,<sup>88</sup> but not the pledgor's right to actual notice by demand for payment or otherwise.<sup>89</sup>

By agent. An agent of the pledgor who has only special authority to make the pledge has no authority to waive a statutory notice of sale.<sup>90</sup>

Construction of agreement

Notes authorizing sale of collateral by holder without notice are construed strictly against maker.—Jones v. Kineo Trust Co., D.C.Me., 45 F.2d 795.

Irrevocable right

A pledgee can sell pledged property without notice where pledgee and pledgor have so stipulated, and such right is irrevocable.—In re Kiamie's Estate, 76 N.Y.S.2d 684, 191 Misc. 179.

Binding on surety

Where note expressly waives notice of sale of collateral deposited as security for note, the waiver binds the surety as well as principal.—Read v. Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities, 12 A.2d 925, 338 Pa. 389.

Election to sell at public sale

Provision of pledge agreement, authorizing sale of pledged property at any public or private sale in such manner and on such terms and conditions as pledgee deemed proper without notice, demand, or advertisement of any kind, did not give pledgee right to determine conditions of a public sale as well as of a private sale, and, if a public sale were elected by pledgee, notice was required to be given and other requirements of a public sale met.—Clapp v. Associated Depositors, Toledo, Ohio, D.C.Ohio, 33 F.Supp. 686—49 C.J. p 1003 note 75 [a].

Effect of failure to give public notice

(1) Where pledgee was under terms of collateral agreement with pledgor empowered to sell pledged security at public or private sale and notified attorneys for deceased pledgor's estate that public sale would be had, a sale held without notice to public, wherein pledgee purchased the pledged security for nominal price, was invalid, and pledgee held the security subject to provisions of the collateral agreement.—Huntingdon Valley Trust Co. v. Norristown-Penn Trust Co., 196 A. 821, 329 Pa. 356.

(2) The fact that pledgor received fair value from pledgee's purported public sale of pledged property would not validate the public sale which was otherwise invalid because no notice to public was given or other requirements of public sale met.—Clapp v. Associated Depositors, Toledo, Ohio, D.C.Ohio, 33 F.Supp. 686.

90. Ga.—Van Arsdale v. Joiner, 44 Ga. 173.

The right of the pledgee to sell without notice may be waived by the pledgee,<sup>91</sup> even where it is stipulated that the sale may be made without notice,<sup>92</sup> and such waiver requires no new or independent consideration to support it.<sup>93</sup> The waiver may be made either expressly<sup>94</sup> or it may be implied from the pledgee's conduct,<sup>95</sup> such as his granting indefinite indulgence to the pledgor;<sup>96</sup> but it has been held that such power to sell without notice is not waived by a mere delay in making sale.<sup>97</sup>

Recalling waiver. Where such a waiver has been made, it cannot be recalled by the pledgee without notice to the pledgor and an opportunity to protect the pledge.<sup>98</sup>

§ 60. — Time, Place, Manner, and Conduct of Sale

- a. Time of sale
- b. Place of sale
- c. Manner and conduct of sale

a. Time of Sale

The contract of pledge may specify the time for sale after default, but, where it does not, the sale should be made within a reasonable time.

Unless there is a special agreement making it the duty of the pledgee to sell within a specified time after default,<sup>99</sup> the pledgee is not bound to sell promptly on the pledgor's default,<sup>1</sup> but he may, at his election, do so.<sup>2</sup> The time of sale, however, must be reasonable,<sup>3</sup> and, where it is so, the pledgee is not liable because the market is in poor condition,<sup>4</sup> and he is not bound to postpone the sale, even though the property is then depreciated in value.<sup>5</sup>

On the other hand, where the weather is inclement, the bidders few, and the bids very low, it has been held that it is the duty of the pledgee to postpone the sale.<sup>6</sup>

Where notice given. Where notice of the time of sale has been given, the sale must be held at the time mentioned in the notice.<sup>7</sup>

b. Place of Sale

A reasonable place must be fixed for the sale, and, where notice of sale is given, the sale must be held at the place mentioned in the notice.

The pledgee must fix a reasonable place for the sale of the property,<sup>8</sup> and, where notice of the place of sale has been given, the sale must be held at the place mentioned in the notice;<sup>9</sup> and, where the pledgor, on receiving due notice, makes no objection to the place of sale, he may not claim after the sale that the place was improper.<sup>10</sup> In order to constitute the sale a public one, it must be held in a public place where there may be competitive bidding.<sup>11</sup>

c. Manner and Conduct of Sale

- (1) In general
- (2) Public or private sale
- (3) Good faith and diligence in general
- (4) Adequacy of price

may be made in the same manner in which pledges are usually sold.<sup>12</sup> Where the pledge agreement authorizes either a public or private sale, the pledgee, having elected the manner of sale, is bound by his election and may not sell in any other manner.<sup>13</sup>

The pledgee must comply with special provisions as to the manner of sale contained in the contract of pledge<sup>14</sup> or in a statute,<sup>15</sup> unless the parties have expressly contracted otherwise.<sup>16</sup> If the pledgee sells as provided by law and by the contract, without doing anything to prevent a fair sale, the pledgor may not complain;<sup>17</sup> nor may he complain of irregularities which he himself has invited;<sup>18</sup> but the sale, whether public or private, must be fair and open.<sup>19</sup> A provision in the agreement for the sale of pledged assets contemplates a sale for cash.<sup>20</sup>

(2) Public or Private Sale

(a) Public sale

(b) Private sale

(a) Public sale

In the absence of a special agreement otherwise, a sale of pledged property must be at public auction.

In the absence of a special agreement otherwise,<sup>21</sup> a sale of pledged property must be at public auction,<sup>22</sup> after due advertisement or notice thereof, and an opportunity to the public to bid on the property,<sup>23</sup> and, as discussed supra § 59, after reasonable notice to the pledgor of the time and place of sale. Some statutes expressly declare these rules,<sup>24</sup> and a statute requiring public advertisement and sale of a pledge has been held to apply to an oral pledge.<sup>25</sup>

(b) Private Sale

As a general rule a private sale is not binding on the pledgor in the absence of an express stipulation in the contract of pledge or acquiescence in the sale.

As a general rule a private sale is unauthorized and is not binding on the pledgor,<sup>26</sup> although a demand and notice on the part of the pledgee have been waived,<sup>27</sup> unless the parties have expressly stipulated in the contract of pledge that the sale may be a private one<sup>28</sup> or the pledgor has acqui-

Notification as election

Where pledge agreement authorized pledgee to sell pledged property at either public or private sale and pledgee notified pledgor that the sale would be a public sale, pledgee was bound by his election and could not thereafter sell in any other manner.—Clapp v. #### "Private sale"

(1) A pledgee of negotiable securities as collateral for note, by making entries on its books showing a transfer of collateral and credit on notes without notice to pledgor, did not conduct a "private sale" within contract of pledge providing that on default pledgee might without notice sell collateral at public or private sale and become purchaser at such sale, word "sale" within contract meaning a sale where third persons bid or are given opportunity to bid and to become purchasers; the "private sale" which was within intention of parties was a private sale to be made in ordinary way, where competitive bidding is invited and is unrestricted and is fair and open.—Cole v. Manufacturers Trust Co., 299 N.Y.S. 418, 164 Misc. 741.

(2) Under such a contract the pledgor was not precluded from maintaining action for conversion of esced in such sale.<sup>29</sup> A private sale may be valid under this rule, although a public sale is required by statute, since such statute, being for the benefit of the pledgor, may be waived by him;<sup>30</sup> but such an agreement is void where it is contrary to the public policy as expressed in the statute.<sup>31</sup> An attempted public sale which was void because of failure to comply with the statutory requirement, and was, therefore, of no effect, will not prevent a subsequent private sale authorized by the pledge agreement.<sup>32</sup> collateral by pledgee which merely transferred collateral on its books on ground that pledgee allegedly paid market price for collateral, since price paid by pledgee was immaterial, determinative factor being whether pledgee actually conducted a private sale as required by contract.—Cole v. Manufacturers Trust Co., 299 N.Y.S. 418, 164 Misc. 741.

(3) As used in a contract providing for sale of pledged property "private sale" comprehends something more than a mere taking over of the property by the pledgee at such price as he may elect to consider an offer. It must be a sale conducted in the manner usually and ordinarily followed in relation to private sales of property.—Lowe v. Ozmun, 86 P. 729, 732, 3 Cal.App. 387.

(3) Good Faith and Diligence in General

The pledgee in making the sale acts as trustee or agent of the pledgor and must act fairly and in good faith with reasonable skill and diligence.

In making the sale the pledgee is regarded as acting as a trustee,<sup>33</sup> or agent of the pledgor,<sup>34</sup> and accordingly must act fairly and in good faith,<sup>35</sup> and with a reasonable degree of skill and diligence<sup>36</sup> to conserve the interests of the pledgor<sup>37</sup> and of other persons concerned,<sup>38</sup> as well as to secure and protect the pledgee's own rights or interests.<sup>39</sup>

These rules apply, although the pledgee is authorized to sell without appraisal, advertisement, or notice,<sup>40</sup> or to purchase for himself.<sup>41</sup> The pledgee, however, is not bound to use extraordinary care and skill,<sup>42</sup> and it has been held that he is not required to exercise the same care, prudence, and diligence as a prudent man would exercise in the sale of his own property.<sup>43</sup> A sale otherwise open, public, and fair is not invalid because the pledgee desists from bidding at the request of an intending purchaser,<sup>44</sup> or because there is only one bidder;<sup>45</sup> or because the pledgee furnishes the purchaser with a large per cent of the purchase money and takes back a pledge of the property as security.<sup>46</sup>

Exhibiting property. In making the sale it is the pledgee's duty to exhibit the pledged property in such a manner as to attract buyers,<sup>47</sup> and to disclose to them the property to be sold;<sup>48</sup> but a statutory requirement that the property be present at the time and place of sale is substantially complied with when it is near-by and there is opportunity for inspection,<sup>49</sup> and, where the property sold is a note, the sale is not invalidated because made without the physical presence of drafts issued therefor but not in the possession of, or known to, the pledgee.<sup>50</sup>

(4) Adequacy of Price

The pledgee must exercise reasonable care, skill, and diligence to obtain a fair and adequate price, but, where he so acts, mere inadequacy of price is no ground for setting aside the sale.

The pledgee must exercise reasonable care, skill, and diligence to obtain a fair and adequate price for the property;<sup>51</sup> he must use every reasonable means to obtain what the property is reasonably worth at the time of the sale.<sup>52</sup> According to some authority, if a pledgee sells to himself he must pay the reasonable market value,<sup>53</sup> but according to other authority the fact of a purchase for a nominal amount is not alone sufficient evidence to establish bad faith.<sup>54</sup> In the absence of fraud or unfair dealings the pledgee is required to obtain only the market value, and not the so-called actual value, of the property.<sup>55</sup> He must not unduly sacrifice the property,<sup>56</sup> even though he has the right to buy it in for himself.<sup>57</sup> The pledgee, however, is not required to watch the market and take advantage of the most favorable opportunity for selling;<sup>58</sup> and,

Listed market value

Where pledge agreement provided that, if any of the collateral pledged to secure note depreciated in value, plaintiff could demand additional collateral, and that, in event additional collateral was not deposited within a designated time after demand, plaintiff could elect to sell the collateral securities, and because of a depression the market value of the collateral declined, and plaintiff demanded additional collateral and, when additional collateral was not forthcoming, sold the collateral, the sale of the collateral was valid, even though the listed market value of the collateral did not represent the true value of the collateral.—*Mercantile-Commerce Bank & Trust Co. v. if the sale is conducted in good faith and with reasonable skill and diligence, mere inadequacy of price is no ground for setting aside the sale,<sup>59</sup> or for rendering the pledgee liable in damages,<sup>60</sup> unless the discrepancy is so great as to establish negligence or bad faith on his part and make him liable for the difference between the selling price and the actual value of the property;<sup>61</sup> and it has been held that, where the property is readily salable on the open market, at a definite market value, the mere failure of the pledgee at a private sale to sell at such value may of itself amount not only to a failure of ordinary and reasonable skill and diligence, but also, where the facts are plain, amount to such lack of good faith as to constitute fraud and conversion.<sup>62</sup>

§ 61. — Persons Who May Buy at Sale

b. Pledgee as purchaser

a. In General

Persons associated with the pledgee have been held proper purchasers where they buy for themselves.

The validity of a sale to a particular person must be determined by the facts existing at the time of the sale.<sup>63</sup> The incapacity of a pledgee to purchase at his own sale does not prevent the agent or attorney of the pledgee from purchasing the property in good faith for himself,<sup>64</sup> and the sale is not rendered voidable by his subsequent sale of the property to the pledgee.<sup>65</sup> An agent with whom a note has been left for collection and to whom collateral securities have been delivered for sale if necessary to secure the collection, is not a "holder" of such securities within a provision in the note authorizing the holders to sell the securities and to become the purchaser thereof, and, therefore, such agent may not become the purchaser at a sale made by him.<sup>66</sup> A pledge to an agent personally does not prevent his principal from purchasing at a sale thereof.<sup>67</sup>

Partner. It has been held that a general partner of a firm holding property in pledge may not purchase the property for himself;<sup>68</sup> but that this disability does not apply to a special partner, who is prohibited by statute from transacting any business on account of the firm.<sup>69</sup>

b. Pledgee as Purchaser

- (1) Without authority
- (2) Under express authority

(1) Without Authority

- (a) In general
- (b) Purchase through third person
- (c) Unauthorized purchase as conversion

(a) In General

Unless specially authorized to do so a pledgee may not, as against the pledgor, become the purchaser of the property at his own sale.

Purchase by pledgee

Where the terms of the contract authorize the pledgee to sell and to purchase on sale, and due notice of the sale is given to pledgor so that he has an opportunity to protect his interest, a low or inadequate price is not sufficient to establish that lack of good faith or diligence on part of pledgee which would warrant setting aside the sale.—*General Phoenix Corp. v. ### Son and associate

Pledgee's private sale of collateral to his son associated with him in business, after repeated unsuccessful efforts to sell to others, and notice to debtor could not be set aside where son was not father's agent and there was no proof that price was unfair, and, while such fact would cause the sale to be scrutinized, it would not alone invalidate it.—*Williams v. The rules relating to the purchase by a mortgagee of the property mortgaged at a sale thereof by himself apply to the purchase by a pledgee of the property pledged;<sup>70</sup> and accordingly it is a well settled rule, that, unless specially authorized to do so, a pledgee after a default may not, as against the pledgor, become the purchaser of the property pledged at a sale thereof by himself.<sup>71</sup> Such a purchase, however, does not dissolve or change the relationship of pledgor and pledgee,<sup>72</sup> and is not void except in case of actual fraud,<sup>73</sup> but is merely voidable,<sup>74</sup> especially where the pledgee is the highest bidder for the property;<sup>75</sup> and passes title until the pledgor disaffirms the sale,<sup>76</sup> and as a condition to disaffirming the purchase, the pledgor must offer to do equity,<sup>77</sup> which usually requires an offer to redeem by payment of the secured debt.<sup>78</sup>

Under this rule if the pledgee, either directly or indirectly, wrongfully becomes the purchaser at his own sale, the pledgor at his election, which must be exercised within such a reasonable time as to show due diligence,<sup>79</sup> may either avoid the sale, in which case the pledgee will hold the property subject to the same conditions as before,<sup>80</sup> without regard to the question of good faith or fairness in the conduct of the sale,<sup>81</sup> or the adequacy of the price realized;<sup>82</sup> or the pledgor may affirm the sale, and hold the pledgee responsible for the application of the proceeds,<sup>83</sup> in which case the title

Private sale

The rule that pledgee, without pledgor's consent, may not purchase pledged chattel, directly or indirectly, at public sale, except where sale is under control of court of equity, and that if pledgee purchases pledged property the sale is voidable by pledgor, applies with even greater strictness to private sales.—Linker v. Batavian Nat. Bank of La Crosse, 12 N.W.2d 721, 244 Wis. 459.

Power to make private sale without notice is inconsistent with the thought that the donee of the power may be both the seller and the purchaser, and the words "or any sale hereunder" within mortgage, authorizing mortgagee on mortgagor's failure to pay note to take immediate possession of property conveyed and sell real estate at public auction, and "in the event that such sale, or of any sale hereunder," authorizing mortgagee to purchase property, refer to the power and not to entire instrument, and hence, general power of sale embodied in mortgage related only to realty embodied in mortgage and not to collaterals.—De Merville v. of the pledgee becomes perfect.<sup>84</sup> If he elects to affirm the sale, he must affirm it as an entirety.<sup>85</sup>

The pledgee cannot avoid a sale which he has made to himself.<sup>86</sup>

The owner of property pledged without his authority may avoid a sale made in bad faith by the pledgee to himself.<sup>87</sup>

(b) Purchase through Third Person

A purchase by a third person for the pledgee is not binding on the pledgor.

Where the purchase is made nominally by a third person, but is merely colorable, and in reality is by or for the pledgee, it is not binding on the pledgor,<sup>88</sup> especially where the pledgee subsequently rescinds the sale and retakes the property.<sup>89</sup> A mere subsequent sale by a purchaser in good faith to the pledgee does not render the original sale voidable<sup>90</sup> or the pledgee liable for any profits made by him out of the property.<sup>91</sup>

(c) Unauthorized Purchase as Conversion

Generally, an unauthorized purchase by the pledgee does not amount to a conversion.

Since an unauthorized purchase by the pledgee is inoperative as long as he retains possession and control, it does not amount to a conversion of the property, and may not be so treated by the pledgor,<sup>92</sup> unless he thereafter exercises a dominion over the property inconsistent with his relationship as pledgee and with the rights of the pledgor.<sup>93</sup> On the other hand, even where the pledgee is authorized to bid at his own sale, if the sale is made in bad faith, without notice to the pledgor, it amounts to a conversion;<sup>94</sup> and where, in such a case, the pledgee professes that the property has been sold to a stranger, he cannot defeat a charge of conversion by showing that at all times he has had actual control of the property.<sup>95</sup>

(2) Under Express Authority

The pledgor may authorize the pledgee to purchase the property pledged, but in purchasing the pledgee must exercise good faith, and must conform strictly to the provisions authorizing the purchase.

It is well settled that the pledgor, by the pledge agreement or otherwise, may authorize the pledgee, on default, to purchase the property pledged,<sup>96</sup> and apply the proceeds to the liquidation of the debt,<sup>97</sup> or he may consent to the pledgee's taking

Effect of affirmation

Where a pledgor affirms an unauthorized sale by the pledgee to himself, his only right is to have credited on his debt the amount realized from the sale, with payment to him of the surplus, if any.—Erickson v. Midland Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Minneapolis, 285 N.W. 611, 205 Minn. 224.

Repudiation by pledgor

(1) If the pledgee wrongfully purchases the pledged property, such a purchase is not a conversion if the pledgor repudiates the transaction and no change in the actual condition and situation of the property has occurred.—Moore v. Waterbury Tool Co., 199 A. 97, 124 Conn. 201, 116 A.L.R. 564.

(2) If an unauthorized sale to himself by a pledgee, who remains in possession and control of the pledged property, is disaffirmed by the pledgor, the contract of pledge remains in force, and, thereunder, the pledgee retains the right of possession, and hence cannot be charged with conversion.—Erickson v. Midland Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Minneapolis, 285 N.W. 611, 205 Minn. 224.

Assignee of pledgee

Provision in note permitting sale of collateral and authorizing holder of note to purchase the collateral at sale was not unlawful, and pledgee's assignee was entitled to purchase collateral.—In re Burton Coal Co., D.C.Ill., 57 F.Supp. 361.

Pledgee or agent

An agreement in a promissory note, payment of which is secured by collateral securities, that, on a sale of the securities for default on the part of the maker, the holder of the note may become the purchaser of the securities, is valid; and the agent of the holder may purchase for his principal.—Metropolitan Loan & Trust Co. v. Schafer, 44 App. D.C. 356.

over the property at an appraised value.<sup>98</sup> Some statutes expressly authorize the pledgee to purchase.<sup>99</sup> Where by the terms of the contract, or otherwise, the pledgee is authorized to buy at his own sale, a purchase made by him in compliance with the authority granted,<sup>1</sup> in good faith and for a fair consideration,<sup>2</sup> is valid and binding on the pledgor, and the pledgee acquires full right and title to the property,<sup>3</sup> and cannot be required to account for an increased price received by him on a resale.<sup>4</sup> In order that the sale may be effective, however, the pledgee must bring himself strictly within the terms of the contract authorizing him to purchase,<sup>5</sup> must exercise good faith toward the pledgor in selling and making the purchase,<sup>6</sup> and may not purchase it at a valuation so inadequate as to suggest fraud.<sup>7</sup> Where the pledgee is the purchaser of a collateral note and has credited the purchase price on the principal obligation,<sup>8</sup> he may recover from the pledgor, as indorser, on default of the maker of the collateral note.

Construction of provision authorizing purchase.

If the pledge contract is unambiguous with respect to the right of the pledgee to purchase at his sale, it will be literally construed;<sup>9</sup> but, if it is ambiguous, it will be strictly construed against the pledgee.<sup>10</sup> A provision authorizing purchase at a public sale by necessary implication excludes the right to purchase at a private sale,<sup>11</sup> and the sale must in fact be public.<sup>12</sup> A provision authorizing a pledgee to purchase at his own sale has been held to require a public sale,<sup>13</sup> unless authority to purchase at a private sale is clearly given.<sup>14</sup> Such a provision has been held not to authorize a mere transfer of the collateral to the pledgee by satisfying the debt,<sup>15</sup> and will be invalid as far as it amounts to a mere forfeiture;<sup>16</sup> but it has been held that no particular form of transfer should be required under a provision authorizing the pledgee to purchase,<sup>17</sup> that the transaction should be upheld if made in good faith,<sup>18</sup> and that the acts of the pledgee in appropriating the collateral under a power to sell to himself at a private sale without notice must be judged by the facts and circumstances of the particular case.<sup>19</sup>

§ 62. — Operation and Effect of Sale in General

A proper sale by the pledgee binds the pledgor, but a sale illegally or improperly made may be set aside.

Where a sale of pledged property is made by the pledgee fairly and in good faith, the pledgor is bound by the sale,<sup>20</sup> although the property might have brought a higher price under other circumstances.<sup>21</sup> The pledgee is accountable only for the amount actually received by him;<sup>22</sup> and the sale constitutes a payment of the principal debt to the extent that funds for that purpose are realized from the sale.<sup>23</sup> On the other hand, where the sale is made illegally,<sup>24</sup> or where due regard is not paid to the interest of the pledgor and due care is not exercised, whereby the pledged property is sacrificed to the injury of the pledgor, the sale may be set aside,<sup>25</sup> or the pledgee may be required to account for any loss due to his carelessness or bad faith.<sup>26</sup> If the pledge remains in the possession of the pledgee after an invalid sale, he continues to hold it as a pledge, subject to the rights of the pledgor as before the sale,<sup>27</sup> and subject to the pledgor's right to redeem.<sup>28</sup>

§ 63. — Invalid Sale as Conversion

- a. In general
- b. Remedies of pledgor or owner
- c. Measure of damages

a. In General

A wrongful sale which puts the property beyond the pledgee's control constitutes a conversion.

Although the pledgee has a right to sell the pledged property on default of the pledgor, if he wrongfully sells the property so as to place it beyond his control it constitutes a conversion for which he is liable to the pledgor;<sup>29</sup> and it has been held that, even though an unauthorized purchase by the pledgee does not amount to a conversion, if, after such a purchase, the pledgee sells the property so as not to be able to return it to the pledgor on performance by him, he is liable for conversion.<sup>30</sup> Thus, a pledgee is liable for conversion where, when demand and notice are necessary, he wrongfully sells the property without demand or notice to the pledgor,<sup>31</sup> or otherwise sells it in violation of the rules of law governing such sales,<sup>32</sup> or in violation of the terms of the pledge,<sup>33</sup> or of the rights of the pledgor.<sup>34</sup> A sale with the consent of the pledgor does not, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, constitute a conversion;<sup>35</sup> nor does a sale in accordance with the terms of the agreement of pledge;<sup>36</sup> and, where the property is lawfully sold and the pledgor given credit on his indebtedness in an amount greater than the face and interest of the debt, he has suffered no damage by reason of the sale and may not complain thereof.<sup>37</sup>

Subsequent sale. Where pledged property is converted by a wrongful sale thereof by the pledgee, a subsequent sale by the purchaser has been held to make him and the subsequent purchaser joint tort-feasors in the conversion.<sup>38</sup>

Defenses. It is no defense to a pledgee's liability for conversion by an unauthorized sale that he did not profit by the sale,<sup>39</sup> or that the pledgor afterward bought the property from the purchaser at about the price for which the pledgee sold it.<sup>40</sup> Where a part owner of property pledges it for his individual benefit, with the authority and consent of his coöwner, the pledgee is estopped to set up the coöwner's title as a defense to an action by the pledgor for its conversion.<sup>41</sup> The pledgee may set off the amount of his debt against the amount of the pledgor's recovery.<sup>42</sup>

b. Remedies of Pledgor or Owner

On a wrongful sale the pledgor may sue in trover for conversion, or he may maintain an action for damages, or he may ratify the sale and sue for the proceeds as money received for his use, or may sue in equity where his remedy at law is inadequate. The real owner of property pledged by a third person may sue the pledgee for conversion by a wrongful sale.

The pledgor, on being informed of an unauthorized sale by the pledgee, may elect to ratify the sale and claim the benefit of the surplus,<sup>43</sup> or he may repudiate the sale and credit of the surplus and hold the pledgee responsible for the property.<sup>44</sup> Accordingly, on such a wrongful sale, the pledgor may sue either in trover for the conversion,<sup>45</sup> or he may maintain an action on the case for damages,<sup>46</sup> even though he is precluded by lapse of time from avoiding the sale;<sup>47</sup> or, if he elects to ratify the sale, he may sue in assumpsit for the proceeds, as money received to his use;<sup>48</sup> or, as discussed supra § 55, he may plead such conversion as a set-off to a suit on the original debt by the pledgee; or, where the circumstances are such that there is no adequate remedy at law, he may sue the pledgee in equity to recover the property,<sup>49</sup> or to recover the proceeds thereof.<sup>50</sup>

Right of real owner. An owner of property, pledged by a third person, may sue the pledgee for conversion by a wrongful sale,<sup>51</sup> although he permitted the property to be so pledged.<sup>52</sup> No recovery can be had where the alleged conversion was damnum absque injuria.<sup>53</sup>

Proceeds properly paid

Alleged conversion by trust company of estate's stock pledged to the trust company by executor was damnum absque injuria and did not render trust company liable to estate, where the proceeds of the sales of all stocks by the trust company at the direction of the executor were used in payment of the estate's debts or were deposited to the estate's credit with the exception of a small

Conditions precedent. As a general rule, a tender of his debt by the pledgor is not necessary before bringing suit,<sup>54</sup> as it would be useless, since the pledgee has put it out of his power to perform his part of the contract.<sup>55</sup> Where the pledgee has bought the property at his own sale, the pledgor may not sue him in conversion unless he has first tendered the amount of his debt and demanded a return of the property, and the tender and demand have been refused by the pledgee;<sup>56</sup> nor may the sale be set aside unless the pledgor has paid or tendered the amount of the debt.<sup>57</sup>

c. Measure of Damages

Generally, the pledgor may recover the actual amount of loss suffered by him by reason of a wrongful sale of the pledged property.

As a general rule the pledgor is entitled to recover of the pledgee the actual amount of the loss suffered by him by reason of the wrongful sale,<sup>58</sup> that is, the value of the pledged property at the time of conversion less the amount of the debt secured by the pledge;<sup>59</sup> and the fact that the pledgee denies the conversion will not deprive him of the right to deduct the principal debt from the amount of the collateral.<sup>60</sup> In determining this difference the pledgee will be charged with the actual or market value of the property at the time of conversion,<sup>61</sup> and, in the case of commercial paper, its actual value at the time of sale is prima facie its face value.<sup>62</sup>

Mingled property. Where the pledgee without authority buys the property himself and so mingles it with the property of others that he cannot show the amounts realized therefrom, the pledgor may recover for the whole lot of his property at the price obtained by the pledgee for the best grade of such property.<sup>63</sup>

Nominal damages. It has been held that, where the amount of the secured debt equals or exceeds the value of the property converted, the pledgor is entitled to nominal damages only.<sup>64</sup>

§ 64. — Waiver of Defects and Ratification of Invalid Sale

Defects in the sale may be waived by the pledgor, or he may ratify an invalid sale so as to make it binding on him.

The pledgor may waive, either expressly or impliedly, his right to object to any defects in making a sale of the pledged property,<sup>65</sup> such as in respect of the time and place of sale;<sup>66</sup> or, after acquiring full knowledge of an invalid sale, he may ratify it, so as to make it binding on him,<sup>67</sup> and cure defects in the sale as to notice or publicity.<sup>68</sup> Such ratification need not be express, but may be implied, from the pledgor's acts,<sup>69</sup> unless he was

Special assumption

Where pledgee sold pledged property at private sale without notice, in violation of express agreement that pledged property was not to be sold without pledgor's consent, pledgor could maintain special assumption to recover his actual damages for breach of contract.—Stanley v. People's Sav. Bank, 157 So. 844, 229 Ala. 446.

Fair market value as standard

If trust company, holding as security on surety's note a master's certificate showing purchase of realty in another state by trust company at mortgage foreclosure sale, did not acquire a fee simple title to the realty and sold the realty in violation of the surety's rights under law of such state, the surety's only claim was a claim for damages against the trust company to be measured by the difference between the fair market value of the realty at time trust company disposed of it and amount actually received for the realty.—Staten v. Louisville Trust Co., 158 S.W.2d 387, 289 Ky. 258.

Sale after bar of principal obligation

Pledgor's consent to pledgee's sale of pledge validated sale, notwithstanding limitations had run on principal obligation, where only persons with any claim to pledge were pledgor and pledgee.—Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Holbrook, supra.

without full knowledge of the facts at the time of such acts.<sup>70</sup> Thus, where he acts with full knowledge, ratification may be implied from the pledgor's accepting the proceeds of the sale,<sup>71</sup> although such acceptance is made under protest;<sup>72</sup> or from his recognition of the sale in a subsequent settlement;<sup>73</sup> or from his negotiations for a repurchase of the property;<sup>74</sup> or even from his mere acquiescence,<sup>75</sup> especially where such acquiescence is long continued.<sup>76</sup> Where counsel for the owner of collateral is present at the sale by the holder, and announces before the sale that he will present his objections to such sale to the court, the owner will not be held to have acquiesced in the sale by a failure to make further objection.<sup>77</sup>

An unauthorized purchase by the pledgee may be ratified by the pledgor's silence, acquiescence, or other conduct, with a full knowledge of all the material facts and circumstances,<sup>78</sup> unless, by reason of the pledgee's fraud, the sale is absolutely void.<sup>79</sup>

§ 65. — Restraining Sale

In a proper case, and where he has no adequate remedy at law, a pledgor may sue to restrain an unauthorized or invalid sale.

Subject to the rules relating to injunctions generally, the pledgor may sue to restrain an unauthorized or invalid sale by the pledgee, where, under the circumstances of the case, the pledgor has no adequate remedy at law,<sup>80</sup> as where the pledgee is insolvent and unable to respond in damages,<sup>81</sup> or where the property threatened to be sold does not have an ascertainable value,<sup>82</sup> or where the pledgee attempts to use his power of sale to secure for himself or another an unjust or unconscionable advantage.<sup>83</sup> However, a preliminary injunction against such a sale will not be granted except in a clear case, in order to prevent irreparable injury;<sup>84</sup> nor is the pledgor entitled to a judgment restraining the sale, where it does not appear that the pledgee is violating any agreement with him.<sup>85</sup> A sale will not be enjoined merely because a depression prevents realization of the full value of the collateral,<sup>86</sup> or because of the lender's oral agreement to extend time of payment where there was no fraud in obtaining the note and the lender is not insolvent.<sup>87</sup>

§ 66. — Title and Rights of Purchaser

A valid sale divests the pledgor of his title and vests it in the purchaser, but a purchaser at an invalid sale acquires only the pledgee's right or interest in the property.

Where a sale of pledged property by the pledgee, on default of the pledgor is legally and validly made in compliance with the terms of the pledge and the rules of law pertaining thereto, it divests the title of the pledgor and vests in the purchaser a good and valid title to the property pledged,<sup>88</sup> that is, all the right and interest in the property which the pledgor could empower the pledgee to sell at the time the pledge was given,<sup>89</sup> even though there may still remain a trust relationship between the pledgor and pledgee requiring the pledgee to pay any surplus over the amount due him to the pledgor;<sup>90</sup> and, where the purchaser buys in good faith, it is immaterial whether or not he had notice that the property was pledged.<sup>91</sup> Under this rule a bona fide purchaser of a pledged chose in action, where a sale thereof is authorized, may enforce it for its face value against the maker,<sup>92</sup> and is not

Where sale invalid as against pledgor. Where, by reason of the terms of the pledge or the rules of law not having been complied with, the sale is invalid as being in violation of the pledgor's rights, the purchaser, as a general rule, acquires only the pledgee's right or interest in the pledged property,<sup>94</sup> and is entitled to hold it, as against the pledgor, only to the extent of the original debt which it secured;<sup>95</sup> and further than this he acquires no title to the property as against the pledgor.<sup>96</sup> Where, however, the pledged collateral consists of a negotiable instrument, or other chose in action or property to which the pledgor has given the pledgee the indicia of ownership, a bona fide purchaser thereof takes absolute title, even as against the pledgor;<sup>97</sup> and the purchaser's rights are not affected by notice of the pledgor's rights after a part of the property has been delivered and paid for.<sup>98</sup> Fraud of the pledgee to which the purchaser is not a party does not vitiate the sale as to him.<sup>99</sup> Where the pledgee of a deed of trust and note secured thereby procured by fraud was not a holder in due course, and action on the note was barred by limitations, a purchaser of such instruments at a sale pursuant to the pledge agreement is not a holder in due course without notice of the defects.<sup>1</sup>

a. Right of Action

The pledgee, regardless of his other remedies, may file a bill to foreclose the pledge and obtain a sale of the collateral under an order of court.

Where the debt or obligation for which the property is pledged matures and is unpaid, or the pledgor otherwise defaults, the pledgee, regardless of any legal or summary remedy he may have,<sup>2</sup> may, at his election, file a bill in equity for the foreclosure of the pledge and a sale of the pledged property under an order of court;<sup>3</sup> and some statutes either expressly or impliedly authorize this remedy.<sup>4</sup> Resort to this remedy is particularly appropriate where there are conflicting claims as to the ownership and right of possession of the pledge,<sup>5</sup> or of the surplus,<sup>6</sup> or there are conflicting liens thereon.<sup>7</sup> It has been held, however, that, after the pledgee has recovered judgment against the pledgor, if the property pledged is subject to execution, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to entertain a bill to foreclose the pledgee's lien, because the remedy by execution is adequate.<sup>8</sup>

The advantages of such a foreclosure are that it concludes the rights of all parties in interest and prevents any recourse against the pledgee for violation of his duties to the pledgor or to third persons<sup>9</sup> and that it enables the pledgee to buy at the sale.<sup>10</sup>

Strict foreclosure. The lien resulting from a pledge has been held to differ from that resulting from a mortgage in that it is subject to strict foreclosure.<sup>11</sup>

Where suit to foreclose necessary. In some cases the pledgee must resort to a judicial foreclosure of his lien, as where he has been wrongfully deprived by the pledgor of the possession of the property,<sup>12</sup> or is unable to find the pledgor,<sup>13</sup> or where for any other reason he cannot demand payment and give the pledgor notice of sale.<sup>14</sup>

Where chose in action pledged. Under ordinary circumstances a pledge of commercial paper or other chose in action must be enforced by collection, and a court of equity will not decree the foreclosure and sale thereof,<sup>15</sup> because the pledgee has, in such a case, a complete remedy at law on the pledged chose in action.<sup>16</sup> Where, however, special circumstances exist which call for equity jurisdiction, a pledge of commercial paper,<sup>17</sup> or of a note and mortgage,<sup>18</sup> or of a bond and mortgage,<sup>19</sup> may be foreclosed by a bill in equity.

b. Conditions Precedent

Compliance with conditions precedent to a suit to foreclose is necessary.

Under some statutes a prescribed notice must be given to the pledgor before the institution of the suit against the pledged property.<sup>20</sup> The pledgee is not required to return the collateral as a condition to suing to foreclose the lien of the pledge;<sup>21</sup> and, ordinarily, where the pledge is made to secure an unliquidated demand, the pledgee may at once file his bill in equity to obtain a sale, without first proceeding at law to determine the amount of the principal debt.<sup>22</sup>

Indemnity agreement. Where one pledges his chattels to secure a debt due from a third person to the pledgee, the pledgee, in order to foreclose the pledge, must obtain a judgment establishing the debt;<sup>23</sup> but he is not required to exhaust collateral transferred to him before foreclosure, where the trust agreement is limited as to time only, and the time has expired.<sup>24</sup>

c. Defenses

Various matters have been considered as affording or not affording defenses in suits to foreclose a pledge.

This right to judicial foreclosure is not affected by the pledgee's recovery of a judgment against the pledgor and the appointment of a receiver for the pledgor's property;<sup>25</sup> and the pledgor cannot set up as a defense that he gave the pledge with an intention to defraud his creditors, since a conveyance, void as to creditors, is nevertheless good as between the parties.<sup>26</sup> A third person joined as defendant may set up a paramount and adverse title, and demand possession of the property.<sup>27</sup>

d. Proceedings in General

Proceedings to foreclose a pledge are governed by the general rules of equity procedure.

The general rules of equity procedure ordinarily apply in an action to foreclose a pledge, such as with respect to the service of process,<sup>28</sup> and as to the findings in the case.<sup>29</sup>

Custody of property. In an action to foreclose a pledge of property placed with a pledgeholder, the pledgee is entitled to its possession and to have it remain in the custody of the pledgeholder.<sup>30</sup>

Jurisdiction. The courts of the state in which the pledgee resides have power to decree a foreclosure of a pledge,<sup>31</sup> although the pledgor is a resident of a different state.<sup>32</sup> The setting up of a counterclaim by defendant does not oust the court of its equitable jurisdiction to decree a foreclosure.<sup>33</sup>

e. Parties

Generally, the pledgor and all other persons having an interest in the property should be made parties to proceedings to foreclose a pledge.

In an action to foreclose the pledge there should, as a general rule, be joined as parties defendant the pledgor,<sup>34</sup> or his personal representative,<sup>35</sup> and all other persons having an interest in the pledged property, with the right to redeem it,<sup>36</sup> such as a third person to whom the pledgor has assigned all his interest, and of whom the pledgee has knowledge.<sup>37</sup> The pledgor, however, although a proper, is not a necessary, party where he is without the jurisdiction of the court and no relief is prayed against him;<sup>38</sup> where the bankruptcy of the pledgor is averred;<sup>39</sup> or where the pledgee files a written consent of the pledgor that the property may be sold under a judicial decree, and the proceeds applied first to the payment of the pledgee and the remainder to the payment of a subsequently acquired lien of a third person.<sup>40</sup> The owner of the legal title to land is not a necessary party to a suit for the sale of a contract for the sale and purchase of the land by the pledgee of such contract.<sup>41</sup> In an action on a note and to foreclose the lien on a collateral note, the payor of the collateral note, who indorsed it in blank, is not a necessary party defendant.<sup>42</sup>

Intervention. Where, pending the foreclosure action, the pledgor assigns his interest in the pledge, and also any right of action he may have against the pledgee for conversion, the assignee may intervene in the action to assert his rights.<sup>43</sup>

f. Pleading

- (1) In general
- (2) Joinder of causes of action

(1) In General

The bill or petition for foreclosure must allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action and defendant must interpose his defenses by proper plea or answer, in accordance with the rules of equity pleading generally.

Subject to the general rules of equity pleading, a bill or petition for the foreclosure of a pledge must allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for a decree of foreclosure and sale;<sup>44</sup> and, where by statute, or by the terms of the contract, certain requisites are prescribed before suit for foreclosure can be brought, the bill or petition must allege compliance with the conditions,<sup>45</sup> or allege facts showing a sufficient excuse for failing to comply.<sup>46</sup> The allegations need not be made in formal terms, and the bill or petition is sufficient, as against a demurrer, where it states the substance of the contract of pledge;<sup>47</sup> and a consideration

Maker of note

A maker of note, who owned stocks which he pledged as security to indorsers, was necessary party to action to foreclose the pledge by holder, to whom indorsers repurchased stocks and who knew that maker was owner of stocks, since, if judgment should be rendered against indorser and indorser should pay judgment, indorser could bring action for recoupment against maker who could first require the security to be returned on payment, and the security could not be returned if holder had foreclosed against indorser and sold the security.—Hoyt v. for the contract need not be stated<sup>48</sup> or proved unless the want of consideration is set up by the answer.<sup>49</sup> It is sufficient to allege the pledgor's ownership of the property pledged without alleging how he acquired the property.<sup>50</sup> In an action on a principal obligation for the amount due thereon and for a foreclosure of plaintiff's lien on a note given as collateral, the petition is not insufficient because it does not allege that the collateral note was ever presented to the payor for payment,<sup>51</sup> or that payment thereof was ever refused;<sup>52</sup> nor is it insufficient because it does not allege that the payor of the collateral note had not paid it to plaintiff, or that defendant was not entitled to any credit on the principal note sued on, by reason of any payment on the collateral note, since such payments are defensive matters.<sup>53</sup> Defenses required to be specially pleaded cannot be availed of unless so pleaded.<sup>54</sup>

Third person's interest. Where it is desired to make a third person a party defendant, the complaint should allege his interest in the pledge.<sup>55</sup>

Prayer for sale. The bill or petition should contain a prayer for a decree for a sale of the property pledged;<sup>56</sup> but it will not be dismissed because it may appear on final hearing that it will not be necessary to sell all the property pledged, as prayed in the bill.<sup>57</sup>

A plea of a previous tender of the indebtedness is good without bringing the money into court.<sup>58</sup>

(2) Joinder of Causes of Action

A suit to foreclose a pledgee's lien may be joined with a cause of action on the principal debt or obligation, or with a cause of action for an accounting, or with other remedies of the pledgee.

A cause of action to foreclose a pledgee's lien may be joined with a cause of action on the principal debt or obligation,<sup>59</sup> or with a cause of action for an accounting to determine the amount for which the lien may be enforced;<sup>60</sup> and on proper pleadings the pledgee may foreclose his lien on the pledge in a suit against the estate of the pledgor and others for conversion of the pledged property,<sup>61</sup> or in another proceeding in which the court may direct an equitable disposition of the property among the contesting claimants.<sup>62</sup> A foreclosure of the pledge may be had in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage given as collateral.<sup>63</sup> Where the property is levied on in the pledgee's possession for another debt of the pledgor, the pledgee may have his lien enforced by joining in the proceedings, without resort to a separate suit for foreclosure.<sup>64</sup>

g. Evidence

The rules of evidence in civil actions govern in suits to foreclose a pledge.

The general rules apply as to the admissibility of evidence in actions to foreclose a pledge,<sup>65</sup> and as to the weight and sufficiency thereof.<sup>66</sup> In a suit to foreclose a pledge, notes or mortgages held as collateral may be admitted as evidence,<sup>67</sup> as may also an order from the pledgor directing the property to be held in pledge.<sup>68</sup> entitled to an order for the sale of the collateral, and such other relief as is incidental to that prayed.

On establishing his case, the pledgee, unless the peculiar nature of the pledge makes a sale unnecessary,<sup>69</sup> is entitled to an order for the sale of the property pledged;<sup>70</sup> and in an action on a note secured by the pledge of unmatured vendor's lien notes, and for foreclosure, the court may foreclose the lien on the notes pledged and order them sold to satisfy the judgment on the note sued on, instead of foreclosing the vendor's lien retained in the collateral notes.<sup>71</sup> The court may also order such other relief as is incidental to that prayed for,<sup>72</sup> such as an accounting.<sup>73</sup>

Where property is to be sold, the court has the duty of prescribing the time within which it may be redeemed.<sup>74</sup> The period is a matter for the discretion of the court<sup>75</sup> which may reserve the power to extend the period,<sup>76</sup> and a judgment so reserving the power is interlocutory.<sup>77</sup>

Where separate property is pledged for separate debts, each parcel must be sold to pay the debt which it was given to secure,<sup>78</sup> and an order for a sale and application of proceeds in gross is error.<sup>79</sup>

Attorney's fees will be allowed where stipulated for, notwithstanding a statute providing that, on the foreclosure of a mortgage, such fees must be fixed by the court;<sup>80</sup> and such fees may be deducted from the proceeds of sale where the pledgee is put to the necessity of overcoming legal obstructions in selling the collateral.<sup>81</sup> However, the allowance depends entirely on the contract of the parties,<sup>82</sup> and fees will not be allowed in the absence of stipulation therefor.<sup>83</sup>

Objection to judgment. A person who has no interest in the property pledged is not aggrieved by, and may not complain of, the sufficiency of the judgment against a pledgeholder in an action to foreclosure the pledge.<sup>84</sup>

Appointment of a commissioner to make the sale has been held to be within the discretion of the trial court.<sup>85</sup>

(2) Deficiency or Personal Judgment

A personal judgment for any deficiency between the proceeds of the sale and the amount of the debt secured may be rendered against the pledgor.

A personal judgment may be rendered against the pledgor for any deficiency, between the proceeds of the sale and the amount of the debt secured,<sup>86</sup> and on confirmation of a report of sale the court may order an execution for the deficiency, if any.<sup>87</sup> Where property is pledged to secure the debt of a third person, the pledge may be foreclosed without a personal judgment against the pledgor.<sup>88</sup> In some jurisdictions, however, a court of equity is without jurisdiction to adjudicate the question of deficiency.<sup>89</sup>

i. Sale

- (1) In general
- (2) Pledgee as purchaser

(1) In General

A foreclosure sale of pledged property, except to the extent that it is controlled by special statutes, is governed by the rules and provisions relating to judicial sales.

A foreclosure sale of pledged property, except to the extent that it is controlled by special statutes, is governed by the rules and provisions relating to judicial sales.<sup>90</sup> Thus, a statutory provision requiring judicial sales to be advertised applies to a sale of property pledged as security and ordered sold by a foreclosure decree.<sup>91</sup> A formal levy on the property is not necessary to sustain a special execution in foreclosure of the pledged property in the possession of the judgment creditor.<sup>92</sup> The pledgee may not enter into any covenants with any others than the pledgor except the usual implied covenants to do nothing to destroy the pledge or its value or to encumber it,<sup>93</sup> but he must not deceive or defraud the purchaser by false representation.<sup>94</sup> If property is sold under a void decree, the court may order its restitution so as to place the parties in the same position as before,<sup>95</sup> and may also order the sale set aside where there was fraud therein.<sup>96</sup> The fact that the order under which pledged property is sold is reversed on appeal does not affect the validity of the sale, where it can be referred to the statute relating to sales of pledged property under which it is valid.<sup>97</sup>

(2) Pledgee as Purchaser

On foreclosure and sale under an order of court the pledgee may become the purchaser.

Contrary to the rule which ordinarily forbids a pledgee from purchasing at his own sale of pledged property without judicial process, as discussed supra § 61, a pledgee may purchase the property at a foreclosure sale made under an order of court,<sup>98</sup> and, under a prayer for general relief in the foreclosure action, the court may confirm private sales previously made to the pledgee, where it may fairly be inferred from the facts found that the pledgor assented thereto.<sup>99</sup> By such a purchase the pledgee acquires the title to the property,<sup>1</sup> especially where the purchase is made with the pledgor's knowledge and consent;<sup>2</sup> and foreclosure and purchase at the sale are essential if the pledgee wishes to acquire title to the property.<sup>3</sup> The pledgee must account to the pledgor on the basis of the amount of his bid at the foreclosure sale;<sup>4</sup> and is entitled to credit for the amount of the pledgor's indebtedness,<sup>5</sup> and, in case of foreclosure sale of a mort-

Rule of caveat emptor applies to sale of pledged property, in absence of suppression of fact, coupled with false statement, by one under affirmative duty to tell truth, and an experienced banker, purchasing note from bank on foreclosure of securities pledged for payment of larger note held by it, took note subject to defects, liens, and encumbrances, gage, for expenses incurred in acquiring and perfecting title to the mortgaged property.<sup>6</sup> If the pledgor desires to redeem from such sale, he must offer to pay the debt.<sup>7</sup>

Obligation to third person. Where the pledgee has agreed to hold the pledge after paying his own claim as security for any damages that might accrue to a third person out of a contract with the pledgor, the pledgee's purchase of the pledged property at his own foreclosure sale does not affect his obligation to such third person.<sup>8</sup>

j. Rights of Purchaser

The foreclosure sale passes title as against the judgment debtor.

The foreclosure sale passes title as against the judgment debtor who does not question the proceeding until after sale,<sup>9</sup> unless the sale is impeached for fraud.<sup>10</sup> The purchaser is entitled to the income from the property from the date of sale;<sup>11</sup> and, where another person remains in possession from the date of the sale until its confirmation, he must account to the purchaser for the net income therefrom during such period.<sup>12</sup>

VIII. ENFORCEMENT OF PLEDGED CHOSE IN ACTION

§ 68. Right to Enforce

A person not a party to a pledge contract whereby a chose in action is pledged, and who is at best only an incidental beneficiary, may not sue thereon.

A person not a party to a pledge contract whereby a chose in action is pledged, and who is at best only an incidental beneficiary, may not sue thereon.<sup>13</sup>

The pledgor or pledgee as a party plaintiff in actions on bills and notes generally is discussed in Bills and Notes § 551.

§ 69. — Pledgor

The general rule is that a pledgor has the right to sue on a pledged chose in action prior to termination of the pledge.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>14</sup> the right of a pledgor to sue on a pledged chose in action prior to termination of the pledge is generally recognized,<sup>15</sup> especially if, where re-

Rights of purchaser

(1) Purchaser at foreclosure sale of collateral pledged to secure corporation's debt, which collateral consisted of tax certificates and a note secured by second deed of trust, acquired title to the collateral as against the corporation, whose charter had expired, its statutory trustees, its stockholders, and its receiver.—Santa Anita Corporation v. Walker, 106 P.2d 459, 106 Colo. 465.

(2) Where payee of note evidencing loan to corporation secured judgment on the note, party who purchased the judgment from such payee and, at execution sale under the judgment, purchased the collateral consisting of another note secured by a second deed of trust and paid for it by satisfaction of the judgment, could foreclose the second deed of trust to the extent of the amount of the judgment regardless of whether such party was a bona fide holder for value in due course, since to that extent corporation was admittedly obligated on the original loan.—Santa Anita Corporation v. Walker, supra.

(3) Where corporation paid its note secured by second deed of trust, note was indorsed without recourse by payee and returned to corporation, and corporation thereafter pledged the note to secure a loan and agreed to extensions of time for payment, purchaser of the secured note within the extended time for payment, without notice of the history of the note except that it was pledged as collateral for corporation's debt, was a bona fide holder for value in due course entitled to enforce payment by foreclosure of the second deed of trust.—Santa Anita Corporation v. #### Right of original pledgee

Original pledgee of notes from payee was presumptive owner and

covery is had, defendant will be protected from the assertion of further claims by the pledgee on the same chose in action.<sup>16</sup> This rule is recognized more particularly where he sues with the consent of,<sup>17</sup> or under agreement with,<sup>18</sup> or without objection by,<sup>19</sup> or for the use of,<sup>20</sup> the pledgee, or where the pledgee or his assignee refuses to sue,<sup>21</sup> or where the sum due on the pledged chose in action is greater than the amount of the debt secured.<sup>22</sup> Even where the pledgor is not regarded under ordinary circumstances as entitled to sue, where the pledgee is also obligor of the pledged collateral, the pledgor may join the pledgee as defendant.<sup>23</sup>

After termination of the pledge and return of the pledged collateral to the pledgor, he may sue to enforce it.<sup>24</sup> A right to retake possession of goods sold under a conditional sales contract conferring such right cannot be enforced by the original seller, where he has transferred the contract as collateral security.<sup>25</sup>

§ 70. — Pledgee

The pledgee ordinarily has the right to enforce and collect a pledged chose in action by suit thereon or by foreclosure proceedings.

Ordinarily the pledgee has the right to enforce and collect a pledged chose in action<sup>26</sup> by suit thereon,<sup>27</sup> or by foreclosure proceedings,<sup>28</sup> as by execu-

entitled to maintain action on notes as holder for value, notwithstanding payee bank's repledge of notes to another bank, where original payee had possession of notes and produced them at trial with apparent consent of last pledgee.—*National Bank of Bay Ridge in City of New York v. #### Lack of right to compromise

Fact that holder of commercial paper as collateral security cannot, except in extreme cases, compromise with maker of collateral and surrender paper for less than amount due thereon, does not conflict with rule that indorsement and delivery of negotiable paper as collateral security before maturity pass legal title to holder, with power to collect by suit or otherwise.—Gables Racing Ass'n v. Persky, 156 So. 392, 116 Fla. 77.

Note secured by lien contract

Where contractor did not substantially perform mechanic's lien contract, bank which took pledge of negotiable note secured by lien contract, not as holder in due course, had no lien for which bank could recover on its claim in quantum meruit against makers.—Continental Nat. Bank of Fort Worth v. Conner, 214 S.W.2d 928, 147 Tex. 218.

Transfer of remedies

When owner of securities pledges them to secure payment of his own debt, he impliedly transfers right to remedies which will make securities available for payment of debt in case of his own default, and pledgee has control of property for time being and represents not only his own interest, but that of pledgor, in taking any proper action for preservation of property and collection and care of its proceeds.—Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Spring Street Properties, 67 P.2d 720, 20 Cal.App.2d 618.

tory process and seizure of property covered by the pledged collateral.<sup>29</sup>

Even though the pledgee has express power of sale, he may, at his option, enforce the pledged collateral by suit.<sup>30</sup>

Where collateral is loaned in order that it may be used for the purpose of borrowing money, the person receiving such collateral has like power to collect it as though the borrowing had been done by the owner of such collateral.<sup>31</sup>

The pledgee's right of enforcement survives an assignment of the pledged collateral to a third person,<sup>32</sup> or the impounding thereof in a suit.<sup>33</sup>

The pledgee's right of action exists, even though the pledged chose in action is held by the pledgor for purposes of collection.<sup>34</sup>

Where suit has been begun by the pledgor for the enforcement of the right of action before his pledge of it to the pledgee, on his obtaining judgment, the pledgee or his assignee will be entitled to intervene and claim the proceeds, without allowance to the pledgor out of the funds for the expenses of his suit.<sup>35</sup>

Maturity of principal obligation. The pledgee may enforce his right to collect the pledged chose in action either before<sup>36</sup> or after<sup>37</sup> maturity of the principal debt, or even though a contingent liability which the pledge was given to secure has not attached.<sup>38</sup> The pledgee cannot enforce collateral of which the pledgor is obligor prior to maturity of the debt for which it is pledged.<sup>39</sup>

After payment of principal debt. It has been both affirmed<sup>40</sup> and denied<sup>41</sup> that the pledgee may begin suit to enforce pledged collateral after payment of the principal debt. Partial payment of the principal debt does not preclude the pledgee from collecting on the pledged security.<sup>42</sup> Payment of the principal debt pending the pledgee's action to collect the pledged collateral does not ordinarily abate the pledgee's action,<sup>43</sup> although there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>44</sup>

Under agreement. Where the parties have made an agreement relating to the right of the pledgee to enforce collateral, their rights are governed thereby.<sup>45</sup>

Maker's rights not jeopardized

Where maker of notes pledged mortgages as security, maker's rights were not jeopardized by pledgee's action in foreclosing mortgages and buying in properties, since on payment of amount due on notes he would be entitled to return of properties.—Gordon v. #### Reason for rule

If a note pledged as collateral security is supported by a valuable and legal consideration and is collected when due, but before the basic debt is due, it is no concern of the maker because he owes the entire note, and the overplus, if any, after the basic debt is paid, would go to the payee of note.—McArthur v. ## § 71. — Assignee after Pledge

The assignee of a chose in action may enforce it despite a prior pledge thereof by the assignor.

The assignee of a chose in action may enforce it despite a prior pledge thereof by the assignor,<sup>46</sup> subject to the right of the obligor of the contract, if also the pledgee thereof, to retain an amount sufficient to pay the debt for which pledged.<sup>47</sup> The assignee of a pledgee, who takes the collateral security to secure the payment of a debt due to him by the pledgee, may enforce the pledged chose in action.<sup>48</sup>

§ 72. Duty to Enforce

The duty of a pledgor or pledgee to enforce a pledged chose in action is discussed infra §§ 73, 74.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 73. — Pledgor

On the pledge of a chose in action as collateral, the pledgor is primarily relieved of the responsibility for its enforcement.

On the pledge of a chose in action as collateral, the pledgor is primarily relieved of the responsibility for its enforcement.<sup>49</sup> Where the pledgor has the knowledge, power, and opportunity to enforce the collateral against the maker, however, he may not complain of loss by reason of the pledgee's failure to enforce it.<sup>50</sup>

§ 74. — Pledgee

- a. In general
- b. Diligence
- c. Agreements as to collection or enforcement
- d. Actions for neglect
- e. Damages and amount of recovery

a. In General

It is ordinarily the duty of the pledgee to collect collateral as it falls due, whether or not the principal obligation is then due, and to secure the proceeds of collateral where waste or misappropriation is threatened.

Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>51</sup> it is ordinarily the duty of the pledgee to use due diligence in collecting collateral as it falls due,<sup>52</sup> whether or not the principal obligation is then due,<sup>53</sup> to take such steps as may be necessary to enforce collection,<sup>54</sup> and to secure the proceeds of collateral where waste or misappropriation is threatened.<sup>55</sup> The pledgee is not, however, bound to enforce a chose in action remaining in the joint control of the pledgee and the pledgor.<sup>56</sup> The United States as pledgee is not bound to collect collateral in excess of the sum due on the principal debt.<sup>57</sup>

Where the pledgor assumes an attitude hostile to the pledgee, the latter may be justified in compromising litigation for enforcement of pledged collateral for less than the face value of the claim.<sup>58</sup>

Foreclosure

Holder of collateral note empowering him to sell collateral without demand or notice had right as against mortgagors to foreclose mortgages assigned as collateral, where mortgage notes and taxes were overdue.—Richmond v. Charlestown Five Cents Sav. Bank, supra.

Agency coupled with interest

Under loan agreement stating that insurer had loaned to insured money in amount of value of insured goods lost in transit, repayable only out of net recovery which insurer might make from shipper, agency of insurer to collect was coupled with an interest, and was irrevocable. N.Y.—Automobile Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Hamburg-Amerika Line, 297 N.Y.S. 200, 163 Misc. 491. Wash.—Canadian Bank of Commerce v. John J. Sesnon Co., 123 P. 602, 68 Wash. 434.

Reason for rule

It is his duty to collect the evidence of a debt pledged lest the remedy on the collateral be barred by the statute of limitations and he be held liable to the pledgor for failure adequately to protect the security left in his possession.—Mitchell v. Automobile Owners Indemnity Underwriters, 118 P.2d 815, 19 Cal.2d 1, 137 A.L.R. 923.

After payment of principal debt. Payment of the secured debt by the pledgor to the pledgee operates as a discharge of the pledged securities, as discussed supra § 46, and, if they have already been collected by the pledgee, he is liable to the pledgor for the proceeds;<sup>59</sup> but, if he has not collected them, he is no longer under any obligation to do so,<sup>60</sup> and must hold them for redelivery to the pledgor on demand.<sup>61</sup>

Overdue collateral. Even where the paper accepted by the pledgee as collateral is overdue, it is his duty to use due diligence in collecting it,<sup>62</sup> and to sue on it, if necessary.<sup>63</sup>

Liability for acts of agent or assignee. In some jurisdictions, if the pledgee has exercised ordinary diligence in selecting an agent or attorney to whom he has intrusted the enforcement of the collateral, he is not responsible for loss occasioned by the negligence of such agent,<sup>64</sup> although in other jurisdictions he is held responsible under the general rule of respondeat superior.<sup>65</sup> Where loss results from the negligence of an assignee of the note from the pledgee,<sup>66</sup> or from the negligence of an agent selected by the pledgee without due care,<sup>67</sup> the pledgee is responsible.

ble for any loss where his course has been authorized or ratified by the pledgor,<sup>68</sup> or where the pledgor has waived the observance of the due diligence by the pledgee.<sup>69</sup>

b. Diligence

(1) Necessity

(2) Sufficiency

(1) Necessity

In the enforcement of a pledged chose in action by the pledgee, it is his duty to use ordinary diligence.

In the enforcement of a pledged chose in action by the pledgee, it is his duty to use ordinary diligence,<sup>70</sup> not only in making demand for payment or performance on the principal debtor,<sup>71</sup> but also in taking the necessary steps to fix the liability of parties secondarily liable,<sup>72</sup> in making sales when authorized,<sup>73</sup> and in prosecuting suit to judgment and execution, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) of this section, especially where there is danger of insolvency of the obligor of the collateral;<sup>74</sup> and, where loss has been proximately caused by his negligence in the enforcement or collection of pledged collateral, the pledgee is liable therefor to the pledgor.<sup>75</sup> In an action against the pledgee for failure to enforce collateral or

Discretion to foreclose

Fact that holder of purchase-money note secured by mortgage and pledged stock did not foreclose immediately on default of note but waited because of unfavorable economic conditions did not require cancellation of pledge which was made by vendor in order to enable purchaser to obtain purchase money, in absence of fraud of holder, since holder had discretion in determining when to foreclose where neither note, mortgage, nor pledge required foreclosure at particular time.—Kottemann v. Audubon Homestead Ass'n, La.App., 171 So. 598.

No duty to collect full amount

A pledgee is under no absolute duty to collect the full amount of the obligation, his duty being rather one of good faith and reasonable diligence in the realization of as much as possible for himself and the pledgor.—First & American Nat. Bank of Duluth v. Whiteside, 292 N.W. 770, 207 Minn. 537.

where such failure is set up as a defense, counterclaim, or set-off in an action on the principal debt, it is not enough to show that the collateral has not been collected,<sup>76</sup> but it must appear that the pledgee has been negligent,<sup>77</sup> and that loss has resulted to the pledgor from such negligence.<sup>78</sup> The pledgee is not held to so strict a liability as an indorsee of negotiable paper;<sup>79</sup> and, in case of failure to present at maturity, to protest, and give notice, he is not liable to the pledgor absolutely for the face value of the instrument, but is liable only in the event that loss resulted from his negligence and to the extent of such loss.<sup>80</sup>

(2) Sufficiency

The diligence required of a pledgee in enforcing the collection of collaterals has been defined as that of an ordinarily prudent man in the conduct of his own business, as that required of a bailee for hire, and as that required of an agent or attorney.

The diligence required of the pledgee in enforcing the collection of collaterals has been defined as that of an ordinarily prudent man in the conduct of his own business,<sup>81</sup> as that required of a bailee for hire,<sup>82</sup> and as that required of an agent or attorney.<sup>83</sup> The pledgee is not charged with the active duty of watching the movements of the debtor, with a view to forestalling or frustrating any attempt at fraud on his part.<sup>84</sup> Extraordinary diligence is not required of the pledgee,<sup>85</sup> and, having exercised ordinary diligence, he is not responsible for any loss through failure to enforce the collateral, even though he could have prevented such loss by the exercise of extraordinary care and diligence.<sup>86</sup>

What is sufficient diligence depends on the facts and circumstances of each particular case.<sup>87</sup> The pledgee is not bound to demand payment of collateral security before its maturity, although he may know at the time that payment would be made if insisted on.<sup>88</sup> Failure to comply with the directions of the pledgor to collect or sell the collateral may constitute negligence.<sup>89</sup> Where a collateral note is payable at a bank as to whose solvency the pledgee has no doubt, it is his duty to send the note to such bank for collection at maturity.<sup>90</sup> Where the collaterals are in turn secured by a lien on personal property, it is sufficient for the pledgee to reduce the collaterals to judgment, leaving the owner of the collaterals to subject the property and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debt.<sup>91</sup> Where the maker offers to settle the note by a delivery of specified property, the pledgee is not bound to communicate such offer to the pledgor.<sup>92</sup> The pledgee is not liable, however, where, in the exercise of a sound discretion, he refuses to accept payment of a bond in property, although requested to do so by the pledgor, and loss ensues.<sup>93</sup>

Reason for rule

The rule rests on an implied contract, where there is no special agreement, that the pledgee will observe good faith and diligence in respect of its collection. If he is guilty of laches resulting in damages to the pledgor, he makes the paper his own and must account to his debtor on the principal debt for the sum which he could have made by pursuing the maker of the collateral paper with ordinary diligence.—Erlanger Citizens Bank v. quired to enforce and collect collateral in the exercise of due diligence, the pledgee is under a duty to bring suit,<sup>94</sup> and to prosecute it to execution and judgment.<sup>95</sup> The pledgee is not justified in failing to sue because of an intimation by the maker that he has a defense against the pledgor.<sup>96</sup> The pledgee should present the collateral in bankruptcy proceedings of the obligor;<sup>97</sup> but, where the circumstances are not such as to require legal proceedings in the exercise of due diligence, the pledgee need not bring suit.<sup>98</sup> He is not bound to sue an insolvent, where nothing could be gained by so doing;<sup>99</sup> nor is he under a duty to sue where suit might involve him in loss and expense.<sup>1</sup>

Where the pledgee has notice that the maker of a collateral note is in danger of insolvency, it is his duty to bring suit on it without delay;<sup>2</sup> but, where the maker is reputed in good financial circumstances, and the pledgee has not been requested to sue, an indulgence for a reasonable time will not render the pledgee liable for loss occasioned by the maker's unexpected insolvency.<sup>3</sup> In all such cases of indulgence, the length of time, the amount involved, and the circumstances of the debtor are to be considered.<sup>4</sup> In no event must the pledgee allow the collateral to be barred by the statute of limitations,<sup>5</sup> and he will be liable for all loss occasioned by his failure in this respect; and it is no defense that the maker might not have availed himself of the bar of the statute.<sup>6</sup>

While the pledgee is not bound to surrender collateral to the pledgor to enable the latter to sue,<sup>7</sup> he is liable for loss occasioned by his failure to comply with the request of the pledgor either to take prompt action to collect or secure the collateral, or to surrender possession of it to the pledgor for that purpose.<sup>8</sup>

The pledgor cannot successfully object to compromise of a suit by the pledgee to collect pledged collateral where the pledgor has theretofore consented to such compromise.<sup>9</sup>

c. Agreements as to Collection or Enforcement

Where the contract of pledge defines the duty of the pledgee with respect to collection of collateral, his duties are measured by the contractual provisions.

Where the contract of pledge defines the duties of the pledgee with respect to collection of collateral, his duties are measured by the contractual provisions,<sup>10</sup> and under a contract to collect choses in action the usual duty of due diligence in collection is imposed,<sup>11</sup> although it has been held that such a contract does not impose the duty to collect by legal proceedings.<sup>12</sup> A contract relieving the pledgee from the duty to use ordinary diligence in the collection of pledged collateral is valid,<sup>13</sup> and un-

d. Actions for Neglect

Actions against a pledgee for failure to exercise proper care in the collection or enforcement of the pledged choses in action are controlled by rules of general application as to pleading, evidence, and trial.

Actions against a pledgee for failure to exercise proper care in the collection or enforcement of the pledged choses in action are controlled by rules of general application as to pleading<sup>16</sup> and evidence.<sup>17</sup> In an action by the pledgor against the pledgee for failure to exercise due diligence in the enforcement of collateral, or where the pledgor sets up such lack of diligence as a defense to a suit on the principal obligation, the creditor must account for the collaterals, as in the case of their loss, but having done so, the mere fact that they have not been collected is not even prima facie evidence of negligence;<sup>18</sup> and the burden is on the pledgor to prove negligence and damage,<sup>19</sup> although it has also been held that the burden is on the creditor to prove diligence,<sup>20</sup> especially where he was warned by the debtor of the embarrassed position of the maker,<sup>21</sup> or the collaterals consisted of numerous notes and accounts.<sup>22</sup> Where the pledgee has permitted securities pledged to him to become barred by limitations,<sup>23</sup> or has wrongfully surrendered collateral pledged to him,<sup>24</sup> the burden is on him to prove that his negligence or wrongful act has not injured the pledgor. The solvency of the maker,<sup>25</sup> or an indorser,<sup>26</sup> for some time after maturity, together with the failure of the pledgee to collect is strong evidence of negligence, especially if other creditors have during that time enforced claims by suit,<sup>27</sup> while the insolvency of the maker at material times is evidence to rebut negligence.<sup>28</sup>

Where the facts are undisputed, it has been said that diligence is a question, not of fact, but of law, to be determined by the court on settled principles governing such cases;<sup>29</sup> but, where the evidence is conflicting, or the inferences to be drawn from facts proved are doubtful, the question is for the jury.<sup>30</sup> On conflicting evidence the amount of damages is for the jury.<sup>31</sup> A peremptory instruction for the pledgee is authorized where there is no evidence of his negligence.<sup>32</sup>

The usual rules govern instructions in proceedings involving the liability of a pledgee for negligence in the enforcement or collection of pledged collateral.<sup>33</sup>

e. Damages and Amount of Recovery

On establishing loss through the negligence of the pledgee, the pledgor is entitled to recover the amount of loss sustained by him, the measure of damages being the amount the pledgee would have collected in the exercise of due diligence.

On establishing loss through the negligence of the pledgee, the pledgor is entitled to recover not the value of the collaterals pledged, but the amount of loss sustained by him,<sup>34</sup> the measure of damages being the amount the pledgee would have collect-

In an action by the pledgor to recover profits realized by the pledgee from a purchase and sale of the collateral, the pledgee is entitled to allowance for commissions on the resale where it appears such sale was made by a firm of brokers of which he was a member.<sup>38</sup>

A pledgee unreasonably delaying collection of a pledged chose in action may be chargeable with interest.<sup>39</sup>

§ 75. Actions to Enforce

- a. Conditions precedent
- b. Defenses
- c. Parties
- d. Pleading and evidence
- e. Trial and judgment or decree

a. Conditions Precedent

The pledgee may enforce the pledged chose in action without seeking to enforce the principal obligation, and the maker of a collateral note cannot compel the pledgee, before enforcing it, to exhaust other security held by him for the principal debt.

The pledgee may enforce the pledged chose in action without first seeking to enforce the principal obligation,<sup>40</sup> and without a previous attempt to sell the choses in action sued on.<sup>41</sup>

Exhaustion of other security. The maker of a collateral note cannot compel the pledgee, before enforcing it, to exhaust other security held by him for the principal debt,<sup>42</sup> even though the maker has a set-off available against the pledgor;<sup>43</sup> nor can a surety compel the pledgee to apply the proceeds of pledged property on a note to which he is a party, rather than to other notes for which the property was also held as security;<sup>44</sup> nor will an injunction be issued to restrain a pledgee from enforcing his collaterals while his debtors and the sureties on the collaterals are litigating their equities therein.<sup>45</sup>

b. Defenses

As a general rule a recovery may be had on a pledged chose in action without regard to any defense which the pledgor may have on the principal debt.

As a general rule a recovery may be had on a pledged chose in action without regard to any defense which the pledgor may have on the principal debt,<sup>46</sup> such as a bar by limitations,<sup>47</sup> or to any breach of duty as between the pledgor and the pledgee,<sup>48</sup> such as a failure to collect other collateral.<sup>49</sup> Where the pledgee's entire interest rests on the contract of pledge, it has been held that he cannot recover on the collateral if the principal debt is entirely invalid.<sup>50</sup> The obligor may waive a defense which is available to him.<sup>51</sup>

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, it is no defense to an action on the collateral by the pledgee that the pledgee has obtained an unsatisfied judgment against the pledgor;<sup>52</sup> that he has obtained judgment on another note held as collateral for the same debt;<sup>53</sup> that the payee of a note pledged it to secure a debt less than the amount of the note;<sup>54</sup> that a suit by the pledgee against one of the parties to the instrument has failed;<sup>55</sup> that the pledgee took the note with the intention of making illegal use of it;<sup>56</sup> that an assignee of the pledgee who is a party to the action claims a lien on the pledge as security for a debt of the pledgee;<sup>57</sup> that other parties are claiming title to the note or its proceeds;<sup>58</sup> or that the pledgee has exchanged other collateral held by him for the principal debt, unless such exchange has caused a loss to the pledgor.<sup>59</sup> In a suit on a note by a purchaser from the pledgee, it is no defense that it was not proved that the pledgee made demand and served notice on the pledgor before the sale.<sup>60</sup>

Failure to enforce principal debt. The obligor may defeat an action by the pledgee on the collateral by proof of an agreement to sue first on the principal debt and a failure to do so,<sup>61</sup> but, without proof of a special agreement, it is not a good defense that the pledgee has not attempted to collect the principal debt.<sup>62</sup>

Payment. Payment of the pledged collateral to the pledgee is a good defense to an action thereon by him,<sup>63</sup> but, in the absence of a special agreement, it is no defense that the maker, with knowledge of the pledge, and without the pledgee's consent, has paid the pledgor.<sup>64</sup> Where a pledgee obtains a judgment against a pledgor, the subsequent payment of the principal debt by the pledgor does not serve to destroy any rights which the pledgee acquired against the maker of the pledged notes by reason of the judgment.<sup>65</sup>

Set-off. The obligor is not entitled to set off money received by the pledgee from a person who was only secondarily liable on the pledgor's debt,<sup>66</sup> or to set off a debt due him from the pledgor but unconnected with the pledge.<sup>67</sup> The obligor cannot set off against the pledgee a claim against the pledgor reducing the security below the sum due the pledgee on the principal debt.<sup>68</sup>

Equities between original parties. One who has taken a negotiable instrument as collateral security for a debt which remains unpaid holds it, free from any equities existing between the original parties of which he had no notice, to the extent of the original indebtedness,<sup>69</sup> and subject to equities of which he takes with notice;<sup>70</sup> but, after payment of the principal debt, he retains the collateral subject to all equities existing between the original parties without regard to any question of notice.<sup>71</sup> The pledgee's action is not defeated by equities arising between the maker and the pledgor since the assignment and notice to the maker.<sup>72</sup>

In the case of nonnegotiable choses in action, equities between the original parties are ordinarily a valid defense to an action by the pledgee.<sup>73</sup>

Nonnegotiable collateral used with negotiable instruments. Where nonnegotiable instruments are pledged as collateral, in connection with negotiable instruments, some authorities hold that the rule that equities are unavailable on negotiable instruments in the hands of a bona fide holder before maturity applies also to the nonnegotiable collateral.<sup>74</sup>

c. Parties

The pledgee of a chose in action may ordinarily sue thereon in his own name, or in that of the pledgor, unless he has expressly agreed not to do so. In the absence of special circumstances or a statute so requiring, the pledgor is not a necessary party to a suit by the pledgee to enforce pledged collateral, but all persons claiming an interest in the pledge adverse to that of the pledgee should be joined in the action.

Ordinarily the pledgee of a chose in action may sue thereon in his own name,<sup>76</sup> or in that of the pledgor,<sup>77</sup> according to the practice in the respective jurisdictions, unless he has expressly agreed not to do so.<sup>78</sup> The pledgor has similarly been permitted to sue in his own name,<sup>79</sup> and under statutes requiring every action to be prosecuted "in the name of the real party in interest," it has been held that either the pledgor<sup>80</sup> or the pledgee<sup>81</sup>

may sue in his own name to enforce a pledged chose in action. Under a statute providing that the pledgee of evidences of debt "may collect the same when due," the pledgee may maintain an action thereon in his own name.<sup>82</sup> It has been held that suit to foreclose a pledged mortgage should be in the name of the pledgor,<sup>83</sup> or that the pledgor mortgagee should at least be brought in as a party defendant.<sup>84</sup>

After the obligation secured has been extinguished, the pledgee can no longer sue as the real party in interest.<sup>85</sup>

A contract giving the pledgor the right to sue in the pledgee's name will not be construed as preventing the pledgee from suing independently.<sup>86</sup>

Propriety and necessity of joinder. In the absence of special circumstances, or a statute so requiring,<sup>87</sup> the pledgor is not a necessary party to a suit by the pledgee to enforce pledged collateral;<sup>88</sup> but all persons claiming an interest in the pledge adverse to that of the pledgee should be joined in the action,<sup>89</sup> unless their rights have been lost by the running of a statute of limitations.<sup>90</sup> If the obligor has a defense good as against the pledgor, the obligor must bring in the pledgor as a party and proceed with such defense.<sup>91</sup>

In an action by the pledgor the pledgee is a necessary party where he retains an interest in the pledged chose in action,<sup>92</sup> but not where he has transferred his interest.<sup>93</sup> So, where the ultimate ownership of the securities is not to be determined, the pledgor need not be joined as a party.<sup>94</sup> Although the pledgor may be held not to have the right to sue alone, the suit may properly be prosecuted in the names of both pledgee and pledgor.<sup>95</sup>

In an action against the pledgor for notifying the obligor not to pay the pledgee, the obligor is a necessary party.<sup>96</sup>

d. Pleading and Evidence

The general rules with respect to pleading and evidence apply in actions to enforce a pledged chose in action.

In accordance with the general rules of pleading, the pledgee must allege title or ownership in the pledged chose in action,<sup>97</sup> his right to enforce it against the maker or obligor,<sup>98</sup> and nonpayment of the secured debt.<sup>99</sup> The pledgee need not allege the enforcement of the principal obligation.<sup>1</sup> It is not incumbent on plaintiff to negate in his original petition the existence of facts which are not inferable from his petition.<sup>2</sup> The indorsee of a note pledged with him as collateral, in order to recover thereon, need not aver specifically that he holds it as collateral.<sup>3</sup> Where the pledged collateral is negotiable and has been paid to the pledgor, the pledgee must plead that he is an innocent holder<sup>4</sup> and likely to lose his original debt if not realized through collection of the collateral.<sup>5</sup>

A purchaser from the pledgee must set forth the contract between the pledgee and the pledgor.<sup>6</sup>

A defendant desiring to prove equities against the pledgor, and to limit recovery on the pledged collateral to the amount of the original debt, must plead both the existence of the equities<sup>7</sup> and that the original debt is smaller than the face of the collateral.<sup>8</sup> Allegations in an answer, unconnected with the subject matter of the main action, are demurrable.<sup>9</sup>

The proof must conform to the pleadings.<sup>10</sup> The pledgee need not prove enforcement of the principal obligation.<sup>11</sup> Under the general issue the obligor, when sued by the pledgee, may prove that the chose in action was pledged to secure a different obligation of the pledgor's than that alleged by the pledgee not to have been paid.<sup>12</sup>

Evidence. Where the obligor proves equities as between him and the pledgor, some authorities hold that the burden of proof is on the pledgee to show that he is a bona fide holder before maturity,<sup>13</sup> to establish the existence of the secured debt,<sup>14</sup> the amount of the pledge,<sup>15</sup> that the principal debt has not been paid,<sup>16</sup> and the amount due thereon.<sup>17</sup> Such authorities also hold that the pledgee must further show what other security, if any, it holds for the principal debt,<sup>18</sup> that such other collateral is insufficient to satisfy the debt,<sup>19</sup> and that the circumstances are such as to require application of the pledged collateral in order to pay the principal debt.<sup>20</sup> Other authorities hold that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, there is a presumption that the principal obligation equals the face value of the collateral,<sup>21</sup> and that pledgee plaintiff is entitled to enforce collateral for the full face value thereof,<sup>22</sup> the burden being on the maker to prove the amount of the pledgor's debt to the pledgee less than the face of the collateral.<sup>23</sup> In an action by the original pledgee on repledged notes, where plaintiff produces the notes at trial with the apparent consent of the last pledgee, the want of consent or the bad faith of plaintiff is a matter of defense, and the burden of proof thereof is on the maker.<sup>24</sup>

The rules of general application govern questions of admissibility of evidence in proceedings by a pledgee to enforce pledged choses in action.<sup>25</sup>

Since the pledgee may be a bona fide holder of the pledged collateral only to the extent for which he holds it as security, as discussed infra § 76, the obligor of a pledged chose in action may introduce evidence of equities against the pledgor.<sup>26</sup>

The usual rules with respect to weight and sufficiency of evidence apply in proceedings by a pledgee to collect and enforce pledged choses in action.<sup>27</sup>

e. Trial and Judgment or Decree

Questions of fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court. Where the obligor merely pledges collateral without assuming personal liability for the collateral or the principal debt, no personal judgment should be entered against him in a suit on the collateral by the pledgee.

In an action to enforce pledged choses in action, questions of fact should be submitted to the jury<sup>28</sup> under proper instructions from the court.<sup>29</sup>

Where the obligor merely pledges collateral without assuming personal liability for the collateral or the principal debt, no personal judgment should be entered against him in a suit on the collateral by the pledgee.<sup>30</sup> On foreclosure of pledged collateral the decree should fix the basis of distribution<sup>31</sup> and, where provided for, the amount of attorney's fees.<sup>32</sup>

§ 76. — Amount and Extent of Recovery

As a general rule the bona fide pledgee of a chose in action may enforce it for the entire amount thereof against the obligor, but, where the obligor proves a defense not available as a bar to recovery by the pledgee, but good as against the pledgor, the pledgee will be allowed to recover only to the extent of the debt for which he holds the collateral as security.

As a general rule the bona fide pledgee of a chose in action may enforce it for the entire amount thereof against the obligor,<sup>33</sup> and will retain any surplus after the payment of his debt as trustee for the pledgor, as discussed infra § 78. On the other hand, where the obligor proves a defense not available as a bar to recovery by the pledgee, but good as against the pledgor, the pledgee will be allowed to recover only to the extent of the debt for which he holds the collateral as security.<sup>34</sup> So, where the suit is by the pledgee against one who became a party to the instrument for the accommodation of the pledgor,<sup>35</sup> or where the pledgor is also the maker of the collateral note sued on,<sup>36</sup> the amount of the pledgee's recovery will be restricted to the principal debt. Where the principal debt equals or exceeds the face of the collateral, the pledgee may recover the full amount of the collateral despite equities as between the obligor and pledgor.<sup>37</sup> In a suit to foreclose a mortgage by one to whom it has been wrongfully repledged by the original pledgee, plaintiff is entitled to receive only the amount for which it was originally pledged.<sup>38</sup>

A pledgee sued by the pledgor for damages arising from breach of a contract between the parties pledged as collateral security may set off the principal debt as a defense;<sup>39</sup> but, if he does not do so, he may not object to recovery of full damages.<sup>40</sup>

Interest, costs, and attorney's fees. A pledgee recovering from a third person obligor may recover the costs of the action,<sup>41</sup> including attorney's fees,<sup>42</sup> where these are allowable as costs. It has been held that a pledgee can recover interest and attorney's fees only if such is provided for in the notes evidencing pledgor's indebtedness secured by the pledge.<sup>43</sup> It has also been held that a pledgee recovering from a third person obligor may as against the pledgor retain reasonable attorney's fees out of the surplus proceeds otherwise due the pledgor;<sup>44</sup> but a pledgee in a suit against the pledgor on collateral of which the pledgor is obligor cannot recover attorney's fees for prosecution of such suit<sup>45</sup> in the absence of an enforceable agreement to this effect.<sup>46</sup>

§ 77. Operation and Effect of Enforcement

The collection of the collateral by the pledgee bars any further action on it by the pledgor and operates as a discharge of the collateral.

Advancements

Pledgee's recovery on pledged mechanic's lien note must be limited, as to any advancements made by pledgee after maturity, to the extent that original holder could have recovered from makers, and, if contract was not substantially performed, such recovery would be in personam only.—Blackburn v. Temple Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 216 S.W.2d 233, refused no reversible error.

Part payment

(1) Defendants were entitled to credit for part payment made at payee's office, as against pledgee under prior pledge of note and mortgage, who subsequently acquired title by sale of pledge, where, at time of payment, note, after deducting payment, was for greater amount than pledgor's indebtedness.—Wyoming Inv. Co. v. Wax, 18 P.2d 918, 45 Wyo. 321.

(2) Pledgee of note and mortgage, who acquired title by sale of pledge, could recover full amount, less part payment, where other defenses good as against payee were not established.—Wyoming Inv. Co. v. Wax, supra.

In action against maker and indorser assigning notes to plaintiff as collateral, only amount of indorser's indebtedness secured could be recovered.—State Bank of Norwood v. Daggett, 263 N.Y.S. 715, 146 Misc. 808.

bars any further action on it by the pledgor,<sup>47</sup> and operates as a discharge of the collateral.<sup>48</sup> The amount realized constitutes a payment pro tanto of the secured debt.<sup>49</sup> A judgment ordering execution against pledged securities substitutes the judgment as collateral in place of the securities.<sup>50</sup> When the debt is collected by the pledgor, the debtor is relieved of further liability thereon,<sup>51</sup> and the pledgee is barred from any action thereon and the debtor is fully protected.<sup>52</sup> Where a bond of a third person has been assigned as security for a sum less than the amount of the bond, a judgment in favor of the assignee for the amount for which it was assigned as security, recovered in a suit on the bond brought by the assignee, does not satisfy and extinguish the bond as against the obligee.<sup>53</sup>

§ 78. Proceeds of Enforcement or Sale

In the collection of the pledged chose in action, as by the foreclosure and sale of the property, the pledgee acts as the trustee of the pledgor.

On collection of pledged collateral the pledgee must account for the proceeds,<sup>54</sup> applying them to payment of the principal debt,<sup>55</sup> and paying over any surplus to the pledgor,<sup>56</sup> the pledgee being regarded as trustee for the pledgor as to any amount collected in excess of that due the pledgee.<sup>57</sup> Where the pledgor is permitted to sue, if he is successful he holds the proceeds as trustee for the pledgee to the extent of his interest.<sup>58</sup>

Property or proceeds after foreclosure sale. In the enforcement by the pledgee of a mortgage assigned to him, by foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the property, he acts as trustee for the pledgor;<sup>59</sup> where he buys at the sale himself, he holds the land,<sup>60</sup> and, where he sells to another,

Maturity of principal debt

(1) The pledgee has no right to apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt until after default in the payment of such debt by the pledgor.—Gables Racing Ass'n v. Persky, 156 So. 392, 116 Fla. 77.

(2) Pledgee's retention in own name of cashier's check for interest coupons of bonds pledged as collateral security, even if classed as conversion, did not, as a matter of law, constitute application of checks in part payment of note, since note was not due.—In re Harriman Securities Corporation, D.C.N.Y., 9 F.Supp. 860, affirmed, C.C.A., 77 F.2d 999.

he holds the proceeds,<sup>61</sup> after the payment of his debt, in trust for the pledgor. The pledgee is not, however, under any obligation to bid at the sale,<sup>62</sup> and, where he notifies the pledgor that he will bid only enough to protect himself,<sup>63</sup> or that he will act solely for his own interests,<sup>64</sup> or where the parties have agreed that the pledgee may purchase free of trust,<sup>65</sup> or where he makes the pledgor a party to the foreclosure proceedings,<sup>66</sup> he may purchase at the sale, and on accounting for the purchase money is under no obligation to surrender the land to the pledgor upon tender of the amount of his debt.

Where the pledged collateral is secured by deed of trust, the pledgee may purchase at a sale conducted by the trustee without any obligation to account to the pledgor,<sup>67</sup> but is accountable for the surplus, if any, over the amount of the pledge.<sup>68</sup> The pledgee will hold the title free from the pledgor's right to redeem, on the latter's failure to pay the debt after reasonable notice.<sup>69</sup>

Nature of title

Where title and possession are taken under sheriff's deed, title is vested in pledgee, is substituted for pledged choses in action, and is governed by law of pledges, and not of mortgages. —Freepons v. Elliott, 67 P.2d 924, 190 Wash. 348.

Equity of redemption foreclosed

It appears to be generally accepted that, when a pledgee holding as collateral security a note secured by mortgage forecloses the mortgage under the power of sale granted therein, or by a suit of foreclosure to which the pledgor is not made a party, without authority to purchase being expressly granted, only the mortgagor's equity of redemption is foreclosed. —Crowley v. Atkinson's Estate, 296 N.W. 864, 297 Mich. 15.

Mortgagee ceased to have interest in mortgages assigned to secure collateral note, and premises covered by mortgages, where selling price on foreclosure became credited on collateral note. —Richmond v. Charles-town Five Cents Sav. Bank, 186 N.E. 551, 283 Mass. 380.

The bidding in of the premises by purchaser did not constitute a sale in sense that price bid was payment of pledgor's indebtedness to pledgees so as to require pledgees to account for amount for which pledgees received in excess of amount of the pledgor's indebtedness. —Riddle v. Todd, 28 N.E.2d 326, 306 Ill.App. 252.

PNEUMATIC. Moved or worked, as a tool by pressure of air either by percussive action or by a rotary action; also, adapted for holding compressed air.<sup>60</sup>

PNEUMOCONIOSIS. There are three alternative spellings of the term for this disease; "pneumoconiosis," "pneumonconiosis," and "pneumonokoniosis."<sup>61</sup> The term is derived from three Greek words, "pneumono," meaning lung, "conio," meaning dust, and "osis," meaning abnormal or diseased condition.<sup>62</sup> It is a general term applied to chronic induration or fibrous inflammation of the lungs due to the inhalation of dust,<sup>63</sup> and is recognized as a generic term used to cover all dust diseases of the lungs,<sup>64</sup> including silicosis.<sup>65</sup> Various names are given to the disease according to the kind of dust causing the inflammation,<sup>66</sup> such as "anthracosis," see 3 C.J.S. p 1395, "chalcosis," see 14 C.J.S. p 350, and "siderosis," see the C.J.S. definition Siderosis. Pneumoconiosis is not a germ disease.<sup>67</sup> It is an abnormal or diseased condition of the lung;<sup>68</sup> a lung disease attended by fibroid induration and pigmentation;<sup>69</sup> a disease of the lungs caused by habitual inhaling of minute mineral or metallic particles, as of coal dust in anthracosis,<sup>70</sup> quartz dust in silicosis, etc.<sup>71</sup>

"Pneumoconiosis" is a typical illustration of an occupational disease,<sup>72</sup> and is evidenced by pathological changes in the lung structure attributable to the effects of the inhalation of harmful dusts over a period of time.<sup>73</sup> The onset and progress of the disease is usually very slow, and the victim can continue work for a long time with a considerable degree of pneumoconiosis,<sup>74</sup> but the usual result is a greater degree of susceptibility to tuberculosis infection.<sup>75</sup>

§ 1. Definitions

"Poison" has been defined as any substance which, when introduced into the system, either directly or by absorption, produces violent, morbid, or fatal changes, or which destroys living tissue with which it comes in contact.

The words "poisonous" or "poison" have a popular as well as, perhaps, a technical significance.<sup>1</sup> "Poison" may be defined as any substance which,

when introduced into the system, either directly or by absorption, produces violent, morbid or fatal changes, or which destroys living tissue with which it comes in contact;<sup>2</sup> any agent which when introduced into the animal organism produces a morbid, noxious, or deadly effect;<sup>3</sup> any substance which by reason of an inherent deleterious property tends to destroy life or impair health when taken into the system;<sup>4</sup> a potion containing a noxious or deadly

49 C.J. p 1043 note 1.

In looser language, it probably is fair to describe the general uncritical concept of a poison as a substance which ordinarily has such a harmful or deadly chemical effect on the body that it ought not to be taken internally without technical familiarity or medical direction.—Aubuchon v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 142 F.2d 20, 23.

Noxious potion or substance

(1) "Noxious potion" and "noxious substance" both embrace poisons, although they are broader terms.—

Runnels v. State, 77 S.W. 458, 45 Tex.Cr. 446.

(2) "Noxious potion" and "noxious substance" defined see 66 C.J.S. p 721 note 34.

Death by "poison" to the average layman means death resulting from the taking of some substance commonly classed or called a poison.—Hahn v. Home Life Ins. Co. of New York, 84 S.W.2d 361, 363, 169 Tenn. 282.

(1) Any agent which, introduced into an organism, may chemically produce an injurious or deadly effect.—Watkins v. National Elec. Products Corp., C.C.A.Pa., 165 F.2d 980, 982.

(2) Any substance that, when taken into the system, acts in a noxious manner by means not mechanical, tending to cause death or serious injury to health.—Simpson v. American Oil Co., 8 S.E.2d 813, 217 N.C. 542—49 C.J. p 1043 note 1 [a] (2).

Similar definitions

(1) Any substance, liquid, solid, or gaseous, which by reason of an inherent deleterious property tends to destroy life or impair health when taken into the system, as into the stomach, blood, or lungs.—Urian v. Scranton Life Ins. Co., 165 A. 21, 22, 310 Pa. 144.

(2) Any substance which, when applied to body externally, or in any ingredient;<sup>5</sup> also, such ingredient.<sup>6</sup> The term has also been defined as a substance which, in small doses, will destroy life;<sup>7</sup> but this definition has been said to be too restricted.<sup>8</sup> Poison usually denotes something received into the system by the mouth or breath.<sup>9</sup> The term includes narcotic drugs used in poisonous doses.<sup>10</sup>

Cocaine is classed as a narcotic drug.<sup>11</sup>

Heroin is a poison.<sup>12</sup>

"Infection" and "poisoning" are distinguishable in that, technically, the illness produced by bacteria themselves is referred to as infection, while that occasioned by the poison produced by such bacteria is referred to as poisoning.<sup>13</sup>

Magendie is a morphine solution;<sup>14</sup> it changes color on becoming stale.<sup>15</sup>

Marijuana. The definition of "marijuana" as used in a statute regulating the sale, possession, or distribution of narcotics may depend on the character of its use in the statute.<sup>16</sup> The word should be given its natural, ordinary, and commonly understood meaning, in the absence of any statutory or well established technical meaning, unless it is plain from the statute that a different meaning is intended.<sup>17</sup> As used in such a statute the term has been said to mean the drug known as "marijuana";<sup>18</sup> the preparation or product from the plant scientifically known as cannabis sativa;<sup>19</sup> and not merely the flowering tops and leaves of the marijuana plant or weed.<sup>20</sup>

"Monoxide" has been defined as a form of poison resulting from inhalation of gas thrown off by gasoline engines, such as are used in the operation of tractors and automobiles.<sup>22</sup>

Narcotic. A substance which directly induces sleep, allaying sensibility and blunting the senses, and which, in large quantities, produces narcotism or complete insensibility.<sup>27</sup> The term "narcotic drugs" is sometimes defined by statute.<sup>28</sup>

Opium. A drug consisting of the inspissated juice of the opium poppy.<sup>29</sup> Its use has been way introduced into the system, without acting mechanically, but by its own inherent qualities, is capable of destroying life.—Stone v. Shaw Supply Co., 36 P.2d 606, 148 Or. 416—49 C.J. p 1043 note 1 [a] (3).

Description; characteristics

(1) "Morphine" is a bitter crystalline narcotic alkaloid contained in opium.—State v. Vallie, 268 P. 493, 494, 82 Mont. 456.

(2) "Morphine" is an alkaloid of opium. Opium contains at least nine per cent of morphine. Morphine is regarded as one of the most useful of all drugs for the reason that when applied hypodermically it is unequaled as a pain-relieving drug. Morphine is not soluble in water.—Baker v. State, 58 S.W.2d 534, 123 Tex.Cr. 209.

Habitat and manufacture

"Opium" is the product of a spe-mainly in medicine, as an anodyne;<sup>30</sup> and it is classed by science among the active poisons.<sup>31</sup> It is also much used as an intoxicant, with baneful effects.<sup>32</sup>

Gum opium is opium in a very crude form, a lump form, containing various impurities, such as stones, seeds, ashes, etc., and of a varying alkaloidal strength.<sup>33</sup>

Opium ashes are a derivative of opium.<sup>34</sup>

Powdered opium is a drug prepared from gum opium by subjecting the latter to artificial heat at a temperature regulated so as to avoid any destruction of the alkaloids present, and maintained until the water has been dried out.<sup>35</sup>

Smoking opium is opium in a form for smoking, manufactured or produced from crude opium.<sup>36</sup>

Pantopon is a derivative of opium.<sup>37</sup>

Paraphenylenediamine is an aniline derivative of a poisonous nature.<sup>38</sup>

Piomaine. A poisonous product of putrefaction;<sup>39</sup> an alkaloid poison originating in dead or decaying matter;<sup>40</sup> a putrefactive alkaloid.<sup>41</sup>

§ 2. Regulation of Sale, Possession, and Use

The state has a right to control and regulate the traffic of poisons and narcotic drugs.

The state has a right to control and regulate the traffic of poisons and narcotic drugs,<sup>43</sup> and any illegitimate and unlawful use of the habit-forming drugs is an injury to, and a fraud on, the state or the public as a whole.<sup>44</sup> While the federal government has no power to regulate and punish the sale of narcotics, as such,<sup>45</sup> nevertheless, as discussed infra §§ 10-13, the federal government participates in the regulation of dealings in narcotics by virtue of other powers possessed by it; and it has been said that the regulation and control of the use of narcotic drugs have long been recognized as the joint responsibility of the state and federal governments.<sup>46</sup> The object of the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act is to regulate and control the traffic in, and the use of, substances or preparations that are extremely injurious to the normal qualities and physical structures of human beings;<sup>47</sup> it is designed to make uniform the law relating to narcotic drugs,<sup>48</sup> and to parallel and supplement the federal narcotic laws.<sup>49</sup> A statute dealing with the sale of narcotics may be superseded by a later statute on the same subject,<sup>50</sup> and in some jurisdictions earlier statutes on the subject have been held to be impliedly repealed by the enactment of the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act.<sup>51</sup>

"Economic poisons." Some statutes regulate the use of, or dealings in, so-called "economic poisons," such poisons being defined to include substances intended to be used for preventing, destroying, or repelling insects, fungi bacteria, weeds, rodents, predatory animals, or any other form of plant or animal life constituting a pest.<sup>52</sup> Such statutes must be read as a whole in order properly to ascertain what they are intended to cover.<sup>53</sup>

§ 3. — Constitutionality of Statutes

Statutes regulating the possession, sale, and use of poisons, and narcotic or habit forming drugs, are uniformly held to be valid as within the police power of the state.

Statutes regulating the possession, sale, labeling, and use of poisons, and the possession, sale, dispensing, and prescribing of narcotic and habit-forming drugs, are uniformly held to be valid<sup>54</sup> as within the police power of the legislature,<sup>55</sup> and within its power to legislate for the public welfare.<sup>56</sup> They have been held not to be invalid because they discriminate between certain classes or persons,<sup>57</sup> because they prescribe what shall be presumptive evidence of guilt,<sup>58</sup> or because they contain provisions making it unnecessary to negative statutory exceptions in an indictment or information.<sup>59</sup> Such statutes do not infringe on the rights of liberty and property guaranteed by the fundamental law of the state;<sup>60</sup> nor do they violate the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Federal Constitution.<sup>61</sup>

Statutes of this nature are not rendered invalid, as vague and uncertain, by the use of such phrases as "legitimate use,"<sup>62</sup> "for actual and necessary purposes,"<sup>63</sup> "proper practice,"<sup>64</sup> "good faith,"<sup>65</sup> or "retail,"<sup>66</sup> without defining them; or by provisions prohibiting sale except on the prescription of a physician, or else on the "personal application of some respectable inhabitant of full age."<sup>67</sup> An act prohibiting the sale or delivery, or possession for the purpose of sale and delivery, of food or drink containing poison, is not invalid and unconstitutional, although so construed as to make a violation thereof an offense irrespective of knowledge of the presence of the poison in the article,<sup>68</sup> nor, on the other hand, is a statute unreasonable and unconstitutional which makes only a conscious and voluntary offense punishable, because under it one may have possession of the prohibited article innocently and without knowledge.<sup>69</sup> Statutes which confer power to regulate the manufacture, sale, and use of poison on public bodies or officers have been held constitutional.<sup>70</sup>

§ 4. — Construction and Operation of Statutes

The construction and operation of statutes relating to poisons are governed by the general principles applicable to all statutes.

The construction and operation of statutes relating to poisons are governed by the general principles applicable to all statutes,<sup>71</sup> and such statutes, where

Persons intended to be protected

(1) Statutes requiring druggist, before delivering certain poisons, to satisfy himself that purchaser

penal in nature, are strictly construed and will not be extended by implication beyond their express terms.<sup>72</sup> Two statutes which are a part of the same act and are of equal dignity must be construed together.<sup>73</sup> Where used in statutes prohibiting the sale, disposal, furnishing, administering, or prescribing of narcotic drugs, except under certain conditions, the words "prescribe," "furnish," and "administer" are used in their ordinary sense.<sup>74</sup> The word "delivery" in a statute denouncing as an offense the making of a false representation for the purpose of procuring the delivery of a narcotic drug, has been held not to include a hypodermic injection personally administered by a physician.<sup>75</sup> The necessity of complying with statutes requiring registration of sales has been held not obviated by provisions relieving the seller of certain poisons from other restrictions pertaining to transactions in poisons.<sup>76</sup>

Statutes regulating the sale, introduction, and transportation of narcotics generally apply to physicians as well as to others,<sup>77</sup> except where the use of narcotic drugs is necessary in the treatment of disease, and then they may be prescribed only in such quantities and manner as designated in the statute.<sup>78</sup> Under some statutes a chiroprapist may use local anaesthetics, including narcotics,<sup>79</sup> and he is, therefore, entitled to the issuance of a narcotic permit from the proper state official.<sup>80</sup> A statute making it unlawful for any person to deliver or sell any deadly poison unless on inquiry it be found that the purchaser is aware of its poisonous character has been held applicable to sellers of merchandise generally, and not restricted in its effect to pharmacists;<sup>81</sup> and the statutory inhibition has been held to apply whether the result of the use of the poison is occasioned by swallowing it, inhaling it, injecting it, or merely coming in close bodily contact with it.<sup>82</sup>

Labeling. The doctrine of ejusdem generis applies in construing a statute pertaining to the labeling of products containing a poison.<sup>83</sup> Statutes requiring the labeling of poisons ordinarily do not apply to articles of merchandise in the manufacture of which poison is incidentally used,<sup>84</sup> or to medicines which contain poisonous ingredients,<sup>85</sup> unless the ingredients make the medicine itself a poison.<sup>86</sup> A general statute applying to all persons knows of their poisonous character, and that they are to be used for a legitimate purpose, and providing penalties for failure to do so, were passed to protect the purchaser, as well as the public.—Flynt v. Rightmeyer, 177 N.Y.S. 842, 107 Misc. 692.

(2) A person who is too drunk to understand the dangerous nature of a poison has been held to be within the class intended to be protected by such a statute.—Bennett Drug Stores v. Mosely, 20 S.E.2d 208, 67 Ga.App. 347.

Statute designed to decrease fatalities

Statute relating to sale or possession of barbiturate drugs or preparations was designed to meet the mounting increase in fatalities that were found to result from indiscriminate and unregulated use of barbiturate drugs or preparations commonly known as "Sleeping tablets."—*People on Complaint of Benedetto v. #### Distinguished from selling

The word "prescribe," in statute making it unlawful to prescribe narcotic drugs, means the unlawful issuance of a prescription by a physician, and does not mean to sell a narcotic drug.—Tonis v. Board of Regents of University of State of N. Y., 67 N.E.2d 245, 295 N.Y. 286.

Class of insecticides and fungicides

Statute requiring branding and statement of contents of packages containing calcium arsenate, lead arsenate, and dust mixtures containing sulphur, lead arsenate and lime, and "other insecticides and fungicides," used quoted words as embracing only insecticides and fungicides of the same class as those specifically enumerated; and subsequent enactment of statute, requiring ingredients of all insecticides to be stated on container indicated legislative intent not to include all insecticides and fungicides in previous statute.—McGee v. Bennett, 33 S.E.2d 577, 72 Ga.App. 271.

selling poisons, and requiring the labeling of all poisons without restriction, is not repealed or affected by a subsequent statute applying only to persons of a class and to the sale of certain classified poisons,<sup>87</sup> and under such a general statute one making a sale of poison not labeled may be liable, although the substance may not be within the classification of poisons requiring a label under a later act applying to a certain class of persons.<sup>88</sup> A statute requiring persons selling medicine belonging to a class known as poisonous to mark the package with the word "poison" has been held to apply only to the sale of poisons usually sold by druggists and apothecaries and not to poisonous articles other than medicines,<sup>89</sup> and such statutes have been held not to apply to a druggist compounding medicine on a physician's prescription,<sup>90</sup> and likewise have been held not to apply to the sale of poisons in harmless mechanical mixtures, or in proprietary mixtures that are beneficial medicines.<sup>91</sup>

§ 5. Civil Liability Resulting from Sale, Use, or Exposure

The liability of one who manufactures, sells, or handles poisons, for death or injury resulting therefrom, is in general governed by the rules applicable to liability arising out of the manufacture, sale, or handling of inherently dangerous substances.

Cleaning preparations

(1) Statute penalizing every druggist who sells and delivers any arsenic . . . or "other substance . . . usually denominated as poisonous" without having the word "poison" thereon does not manifest an intent to include carbon tetrachloride, which is not a drug, but a grease solvent, sold commercially as a cleaning fluid.—McClaren v. G. S. Robins & Co., 162 S.W.2d 856, 349 Mo. 653.

(2) The purpose of statute providing for regulation of the practice of pharmacy was to regulate the compounding of physicians' prescriptions, preparing drugs, and dispensing them, or other products of the apothecary's calling, including poisonous substances, as an incident to the practice of pharmacy, and not to regulate or control the sale of a cleaning preparation which happened to be poisonous.—Boyd v.

Sale to third person for own use

Where intestate came into possession of solvent lawfully and used it for purpose for which it was manufactured, it was immaterial that manufacturer sold solvent to a third person for third person's own use and not for resale.—Maize v. Atlantic Refining Co., 41 A.2d 850, 352 Pa. 51, 160 A.L.R. 449.

49 C.J. p 1045 note 41.

Poisons are familiar examples of substances recognized as inherently dangerous within the meaning of the rules relating to the liability of a manufacturer or seller for injury or death resulting therefrom.<sup>92</sup> Persons dealing in, and handling, poisons owe to the public a positive and active duty to limit the danger by labeling or otherwise conveying knowledge of the danger;<sup>93</sup> they are held to strict accountability, and must exercise the highest degree of care to prevent injury.<sup>94</sup> A manufacturer or vendor putting out and selling poisons, without notice to others of their dangerous nature or qualities, or with a misleading notice, or negligently in any other way, is liable for an injury to any third person which might have been reasonably foreseen by the manufacturer or dealer in the exercise of ordinary care;<sup>95</sup> and, further, actionable negligence may result merely from putting a poisonous product on the market, without a showing of negligence in some other or independent way.<sup>96</sup> It has been held to be gross negligence to keep a deadly poison in a bottle without a distinguishing mark or label, and to intermingle such bottle with other bottles containing drinkables.<sup>97</sup> On the other hand, a manufacturer is not necessarily liable for poisoning resulting, without negligence on his part, from the use of a poisonous substance in a manner contrary to his clear warnings;<sup>98</sup> and a patron who is ap-

Authority to prescribe standards of care

United States surgeon general and other manufacturers of product containing carbon tetrachloride are not authorized to prescribe standards of care which will be determinative of manufacturer's liability in a state from carbon tetrachloride poisoning because of alleged lack of sufficient warning on container of a solvent containing such chemical.—Maize v. Atlantic Refining Co., 41 A.2d 850, 352 Pa. 51, 160 A.L.R. 449.

Use without adequate ventilation

A chemical manufacturer was not liable for the death of a workman from carbon tetrachloride poisoning while workman was cleaning the inside of a boiler, where the container of carbon tetrachloride bore the manufacturer's warning that it contained a volatile solvent to be used with adequate ventilation and warn-

prised of the dangerous and poisonous character of a substance prior to its application may thereby assume the risk.<sup>99</sup>

Ordinarily, it is negligent to place poisons within the reach of young children or feeble-minded adults.<sup>1</sup> An unauthorized person who sells a deadly poison in violation of a statute making it unlawful for any person to deliver or sell any deadly poison, unless on inquiry it is found that the purchaser is aware of its poisonous character, is guilty of negligence per se;<sup>2</sup> and, where such a sale and delivery have been made to a child who in turn has given the poison to a younger child, the question whether the sale and delivery of the poison to the older child were the proximate cause of the injury to the younger depends on whether in the exercise of ordinary care a reasonably prudent person would have apprehended that the older child would give it to a younger child who, not knowing its peculiar and dangerous qualities, would misuse it.<sup>3</sup> On the other hand, one using a poison in connection with his work is not necessarily liable for an unforeseen injury therefrom to a child.<sup>4</sup> A widow may maintain an action for loss of consortium and death of her husband against one who wrongfully sold him opium, where the loss of consortium for a period prior to his death, and the death itself, were caused by the use of the drug,<sup>5</sup> and she may recover punitive damages where malice is alleged and proved.<sup>6</sup>

Sale without label. Failure to label a poisonous substance as required by statute is negligence per se,<sup>7</sup> and one who sells a poisonous substance without labeling it is liable in damages to one who, without fault, is injured thereby, where the violation of the statute is the proximate cause of the injury.<sup>8</sup> However, where statutes requiring the labeling of poisons are held not to apply to articles of merchandise which contain poison only as an incident to their manufacture, as discussed supra § 4, the absence of a label does not of itself give rise to a cause of action,<sup>9</sup> and the same result has been reached in the case of a sale of a poison without a label for use other than as a medicine.<sup>10</sup> It is not negligence under such statute for a druggist not to label as poison a medicine compounded on the prescription of a physician, although the medicine contains poison, or is of a poisonous nature.<sup>11</sup>

Sale under false label. One who puts on the market a deadly poison negligently labeled as a harmless medicine is liable to all persons who, without fault on their part, are injured by using it as such medicine, relying on the false label,<sup>12</sup> whether labeled by himself or an agent,<sup>13</sup> or whether sold to the injured person directly or to a middleman and by him resold to the injured person.<sup>14</sup>

Use other than that for which sold. A manufacturer or seller is generally not liable for injury arising from the use of a poisonous substance for a purpose other than that for which it is sold.<sup>15</sup> It

ing that prolonged breathing of vapor should be avoided, which warning had been adopted by manufacturers and approved by the United States surgeon general, since no negligence of the manufacturer was disclosed.—McClaren v. G. S. Robins & Co., 162 S.W.2d 856, 349 Mo. 653.

Absence of order of responsible adult

Violation of statute prohibiting sale of poisons to persons under specified age without written order of responsible adult is negligence per se for which seller is liable if sale is proximate cause of injuries to buyer.—Eckerd's, Inc., v. McGhee, 86 S.W.2d 570, 19 Tenn.App. 277.

Fact that defendant's employee placed a bottle used generally in sale of a popular beverage and labeled as such but containing acid used in connection with defendant's work in defendant's truck parked in close proximity to a sand pile on which children, as defendant knew, were accustomed to play did not constitute negligence which would render defendant liable for damages resulting from a three-year-old boy obtaining bottle from truck and drinking part of contents, since child's acts were not reasonably foreseeable.—*Dennis v. Consumption of shoe cleaner

The manufacturer or seller of a shoe cleaner was not liable for death of child resulting from consumption thereof, where it appeared that cleaner was marketed in container clearly labeled to disclose use for which it was intended, thereby giving notice of dangers likely to result from human consumption there-has been held that a manufacturer of poisonous fireworks is not liable for the death of a child eating them, since that was not the purpose for which they were sold, and they were not attractive to the taste;<sup>16</sup> but there is also authority holding a manufacturer of poisonous fireworks liable for the death of a child eating them where the jury was warranted in finding that they were attractive to the taste of children and injury by children eating them might reasonably have been anticipated.<sup>17</sup> In the absence of statutory requirement, a vendor either at wholesale or retail<sup>18</sup> of another's proprietary compound owes no duty to the purchaser, or to the public, to ascertain whether it contains ingredients which may be harmful or dangerous, if used for purposes other than those for which it was designed.<sup>19</sup>

Exposure. Where one who knows that a substance is poisonous carelessly or negligently leaves it where he knows, or has reason to know, or by ordinary care should know, that it may cause injury to some one ignorant of its character, he is liable for any injury resulting from such exposure,<sup>20</sup> and the same liability attaches to one who leaves exposed a substance not known to be poisonous where his lack of knowledge is due to his own negligence.<sup>21</sup> It has been stated broadly that, where a poisonous compound is kept on private premises, it is the duty of those responsible therefor to keep such poisonous compound in a safe place.<sup>22</sup> Hence, a person carelessly leaving poisonous liquor where a guest may obtain and drink it is liable for the resulting injury,<sup>23</sup> and a landlord who assumes and owes a tenant and family the duty of preparing an apartment or premises for occupancy is obligated to leave no deleterious substance in such a position as will likely result in injury to the tenant or his family coming on the premises.<sup>24</sup> The duty has been held to be on a railroad company properly to inclose or guard a poisonous compound kept on its right of way, so as not to leave it accessible to trespassing cattle.<sup>25</sup> However, one who leaves a poisonous substance, which has been used in making tests, on a work bench in a testing room, separate from a public office, but entered therefrom, has been held not liable for injury to a child entering the room from the office and drinking the poison, and not negligent under the attractive nuisance doctrine.<sup>26</sup>

Fumigation. One using a dangerous agency, such as hydrocyanic gas or acid in fumigating a building, owes a high degree of care to all persons rightfully on the premises;<sup>27</sup> and the use of such agency for fumigation has been held to be an ultrahazardous activity imposing liability on the user for injury to persons rightfully on the premises, regardless of fault or negligence on his part.<sup>28</sup> As to trespassers, however, the user of the fumigating agent owes only the duty generally owed to trespassers,<sup>29</sup> and in this connection one may be a trespasser even in his own home during the period of the fumigation where, after due warnings and precautions, he has

Store customer

Where operator of general store maintained drinking place and cup in room connected with the store, for refreshment of customers and patrons, customer who had frequently used the drinking place and cup at operator's direction was not a mere licensee when she entered cream room without specific permission and tasted water in cup, and, hence, such customer could recover for injuries resulting from injurious substances in the cup.—*Duensing v. wrongfully forced an entrance into the building.<sup>30</sup> Thus, persons using a fumigating agent have been held not liable for the death of a child which was caused by his own willful and disobedient act in returning to his home while it was being fumigated, and climbing through a window in violation of the instructions of his parents and the warnings of the fumigators.<sup>31</sup>

Spraying. One who is engaged in spraying or dusting fruit, vegetables, or other products with the use of an airplane, or otherwise, and who negligently spreads liquid or powder known to contain a dangerous proportion of arsenic or other poisons in such a manner as to endanger the lives of bees, animals, or property of another person in the immediate vicinity, may become liable for the damages resulting therefrom.<sup>32</sup>

Contributory negligence. It has been held that it is not contributory negligence, on the part of one offered a drink and handed a bottle, to drink directly out of the bottle,<sup>33</sup> and that it was not contributory negligence on the part of a mother, attributable to her child, to leave a bottle containing poison where the child could reach it, where the bottle was not labeled "poison," and the mother was not aware that it contained poison.<sup>34</sup> Where a mistake is made in delivering to a purchaser of another substance a wrapped-up package containing a bottle of poison properly labeled, the mistake being induced by the action of the purchaser, there is no liability on the part of the seller.<sup>35</sup>

41. Adding party defendant

In action against gas company for damages for negligently allowing liquid chlorine to be shipped in defective tank car and failing to make proper inspection thereof so that gas escaped and injured plaintiff who was working on street near car, defendant was held not entitled to bring in railway company as party defendant on ground of its negligent handling of car, where gas company was not merely passive and secondary wrongdoer, and addition of railway company would impede disposition of case.—DeMarchi v. Electro Bleaching Gas Co., 278 N.Y.S. 571, 155 Misc. 143.

a. In General

Actions to recover for injury or death resulting from poison ordinarily are governed by the usual rules applicable in civil actions for damages, as for example, with respect to such matters as venue, parties, pleading, evidence, and trial.

An action based on negligence to recover damages arising from injuries due to poison, as in other actions for recovery of damages for negligence, is in form ex delicto;<sup>36</sup> but, where the negligent act involves a breach of warranty or contractual relationship, the action may be either ex contractu or ex delicto.<sup>37</sup> The remedy against a manufacturer, where one has purchased through a dealer, is in tort, since there is no contractual relationship;<sup>38</sup> and, in an action against a seller, where there is no express or implied warranty, the only hypothesis on which there can be a recovery for injuries arising from poison is that of negligence.<sup>39</sup>

Venue. The venue of actions arising out of injuries by poison is governed by the general rules applicable to causes of action sounding in damages.<sup>40</sup>

Parties. General rules prevail with respect to the parties to the action.<sup>41</sup>

Pleading. As in the case of pleadings in civil actions generally the declaration, complaint, or petition must allege the facts essential to a cause of action and must conform to the rules of pleading.<sup>42</sup> Thus, in order to recover for breach of implied warranty under the Uniform Sales Act, in the sale of whisky containing poison, it is necessary to allege the warranty in the declaration or complaint.<sup>43</sup> Allegations which are merely descriptive are not es-

Proof of poisons not specifically alleged

Allegation of complaint in action for injuries from use of deplatory cream that defendant "otherwise negligently and unlawfully prepared, manufactured, sold and directed the use of said cream" authorized proof of other poisons therein than those specifically alleged.—Hillick v. E. W. Edwards & Son, 256 N.Y.S. 313, 143 Misc. 277, modified and affirmed as modified by memorandum decision 257 N.Y.S. 945, 235 App.Div. 898.

Pearl v. Abraham & Straus, 257 N.Y.S. 946, 235 App.Div. 893, and Jacobs v. E. W. Edwards & Son, 257 N.Y.S. 947, 235 App.Div. 893.

43. Md.—Flaccomio v. Eysink, 100 A. 510, 129 Md. 367.

sential to the cause of action.<sup>44</sup> Where the circumstances are such that a seller of a compound containing poison was under no duty to acquire knowledge of the ingredients or qualities thereof, a complaint which alleges that the seller knew, or in the exercise of reasonable care ought to have known, that the compound contained poisonous matter, states no cause of action, since the allegations are in the alternative and neutralize each other.<sup>45</sup>

Evidence. In actions for the recovery of damages for injuries caused by poison, the general rules of evidence controlling in civil actions are applicable as to the burden of proof,<sup>46</sup> admissibility of evidence,<sup>47</sup> and the weight and sufficiency thereof.<sup>48</sup> It has been held, under a statute requiring a record of sales of poison and that the seller satisfy himself that the purchaser is aware of its dangerous character and that it is to be used for a legitimate purpose, that proof of failure to comply with the statute by one delivering a poison makes a prima facie case against him.<sup>49</sup> It has also been held unnecessary for plaintiff, as an essential part of a cause of action, to establish by direct proof that defendants had actually manufactured and distributed a dangerous and poisonous liquid.<sup>50</sup>

Province of court and jury. As in the trial of other actions, questions of fact are for the jury in an action to recover damages for injury by poison.<sup>51</sup> Thus it is for the jury to say whether a workman is negligent in leaving poison acid unguarded where children are known to play;<sup>52</sup> whether certain articles containing poison were attractive to the taste of children;<sup>53</sup> whether, in an action for poisoning through mistake, a clerk was negligent in selling bichloride of mercury tablets where plaintiff's statement that he called for triple bromide tablets was disputed;<sup>54</sup> and whether a poisonous substance kept on a railroad company's right of way was kept in a safe place.<sup>55</sup> It has been held that, if a manufacturer or dealer in drugs puts a label on an article indicating that it is harmless, and the label is false and the article poisonous, he is as a matter of law liable, since proof of the fact is proof of the negligence, and it is not necessary to submit the question of negligence to the jury.<sup>56</sup> Ordinarily, the question whether any given substance is a poison is a matter of fact.<sup>57</sup> Whether or not the issuance of instructions by a manufacturer to operators with respect to the use of a poisonous and inherently dangerous preparation constituted an exercise of reasonable care has been held to present a question of fact.<sup>58</sup>

Questions of fact pertaining to an issue of contributory negligence are for the jury.<sup>59</sup> Thus

whether plaintiff was guilty of lack of ordinary care when he failed to take measures to ascertain the nature of a poisonous substance in a railroad car and in brewery refuse purchased for cattle feed and shipped in the car,<sup>60</sup> and whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in taking a poisonous drug without reading the label on the package,<sup>61</sup> are questions to be determined by the jury from the evidence. Where deceased was given strychnine instead of quinine, which he had called for, and had his wife prepare a dose which he took, with fatal results, the question of contributory negligence was held one for the jury.<sup>62</sup> However, the court should not submit to the jury the defense of contributory negligence in an action for damages resulting from the sale of a poisoned product where the evidence fails to disclose any negligence on the part of plaintiff.<sup>63</sup>

Instructions. The instructions must clearly state the law of the case,<sup>64</sup> and instructions are properly refused where they are confusing<sup>65</sup> or are predicated on only a part of the pleadings and evidence in the case.<sup>66</sup> Instructions which correctly state the applicable law are properly given.<sup>67</sup>

b. Civil Action to Enforce Penalty

In some jurisdictions a civil action may be maintained to recover the penalty imposed for a violation of the statutes relating to poisons.

Under statutes relating to poisons in some jurisdictions the penalty imposed for a violation thereof may be recovered by civil action, quasi-criminal although civil in form.<sup>68</sup> Under a statute declaring it to be unlawful for any druggist or other person to sell cocaine except on the written prescription of a duly registered physician, the penalty may be recovered from the proprietor of a drug store for a sale made by a clerk.<sup>69</sup> Where knowledge and intent are not essentials of the offense, it is no defense that a sale was not knowingly and willfully made.<sup>70</sup>

Pleading. In such an action the complaint should clearly state the facts constituting the offense.<sup>71</sup>

Evidence. As in the case of a criminal prosecution, in an action to recover a penalty under a statute relating to poisons, defendant has the burden of bringing himself within the provision of an exception by way of defense.<sup>72</sup> If the action is to recover a penalty for a sale, proof of other sales may be admissible to prove the manner in which defendant conducted his business,<sup>73</sup> the authority of a clerk making a sale,<sup>74</sup> or intent, where material.<sup>75</sup> Proof of intent or knowledge has been admitted for the consideration of the jury in determining the amount of the penalty.<sup>76</sup>

Questions of law and fact. Questions of fact ordinarily are for the jury,<sup>77</sup> such as whether a certain substance was a "poison" so as to subject a seller to a penalty imposed by a statute.<sup>78</sup>

Instructions to the jury are proper when they correctly present the law and the facts of the case, including the theory of the defense.<sup>79</sup>

a. In General

One who violates criminal statutes governing transactions in poisons may be prosecuted therefor, and in such a prosecution he may interpose any proper matter of defense.

The question whether a transaction with respect to poisons constitutes a criminal offense depends on the statutes of the particular jurisdiction.<sup>80</sup> Under some statutory provisions one is guilty of an offense who engages in the transportation of narcotics<sup>81</sup> or who, except in a safe place on his own premises, lays out a poison.<sup>82</sup> The manufacture of smoking opium within the United States, subject to the restrictions imposed by the federal statutes and those which may be prescribed by the states, is lawful.<sup>83</sup>

Defenses in general. As in other criminal cases, any proper matter of defense may be interposed,<sup>84</sup> such as lack of animus possidendi, where accused is charged with possession,<sup>85</sup> or a former conviction or acquittal of an offense so connected with the offense charged as to be an incident thereto.<sup>86</sup> In general, a conviction or acquittal under a city ordinance relating to narcotics cannot be pleaded as a bar to a prosecution for the same act constituting also an offense under a state law;<sup>87</sup> nor will a conviction under a federal statute bar prosecution for the same act under a local law by the terms of which it is also made an offense;<sup>88</sup> but one acquitted in a federal court on a charge of possessing a narcotic cannot be prosecuted for violation of a state law prohibiting the unauthorized possession of a narcotic where the narcotic statutes of the state expressly provide that no person shall be prosecuted for a violation thereof if such person has been acquitted or convicted under the federal narcotic laws of the same act or omission which, it is alleged, constitutes a violation of the state law.<sup>89</sup>

It is generally held that it is no defense to a prosecution for an illegal sale of a narcotic that the purchase was made, for the purpose of securing evidence for conviction,<sup>90</sup> by a detective<sup>91</sup> or informer.<sup>92</sup> Ignorance of the prohibitory provisions of a law constitutes no defense.<sup>93</sup> Under a statute prohibiting the selling of food or drink containing a poison, the lack of intent to violate the statute has been held not to be a defense.<sup>94</sup>

Physicians. Anti-narcotic statutes ordinarily exempt physicians from the operation of certain provisions thereof,<sup>95</sup> and permit them in good faith, and in the course of their professional practice, to

80. Exception dependent on proportion of narcotic

Section of Narcotic Act providing that provisions of act shall not apply to preparations, prescriptions, and remedies which do not contain more than one fourth of a grain of morphine in one avoirdupois ounce does not exempt all tablets containing one fourth of a grain or less, but limits the exception to one fourth of a grain of morphine in one avoirdupois ounce.—*People v. #### Felony or misdemeanor

Some statutes denouncing as a misdemeanor the unlawful use of narcotic drugs or the administering of such drugs to any other person except under advice of a licensed and practicing physician or dentist cover only the use of narcotics by the user or the administration of such drugs to another, and do not extend to the unlawful possession of narcotic drugs; and such unlawful possession, by virtue of other provisions, constitutes a felony.—Spangler v. State, 117 S.W.2d 63, 135 Tex.Cr. 36.

Essential elements

In prosecution for transporting a narcotic, possession while a circumstance tending to prove transportation is not an essential element;

nor is knowledge of the exact character of the object or a specific intent to violate the law essential; but, as in the case of a prosecution for possession, there must be a knowledge of the presence of the object with intent to exercise, individually or jointly, control over it.—People v. Watkins, Cal.App., 214 P. 2d 414.

"Safe place," under the statute, means a safe place in respect of the character of the substance as poison, that is, where it would not be likely to poison people or such animals as are within the protection of the law.—Larrimore v. American Nat. Ins. Co., 89 P.2d 340, 184 Okl. 614.—Voegeli v. State, 133 P.2d 219, 75 Okl.Cr. 420.

Matter of defense

Exception of licensed physician acting in good faith from operation of law regulating sale and use of prescribe, administer, and dispense narcotic drugs.<sup>96</sup> The right of a physician to make use of narcotics in the course of his practice carries with it the right to possess a narcotic, because possession is first necessary,<sup>97</sup> and the fact that a physician has come into possession of a narcotic by unlawful means does not necessarily mean that he cannot thereafter be in lawful possession thereof.<sup>98</sup> Where the exemption is in favor of "licensed physicians," without defining the term or restricting its application to physicians of any particular school, theory, or method, it has been held that the term refers to physicians licensed by the state through boards or agencies created by the legislature for the purpose.<sup>99</sup>

b. Indictments and Informations

General rules apply to indictments and informations in prosecutions for violations of statutes relating to poisons. The proof in a prosecution for violation of statutes relating to poisons must conform to the indictment or information; but an immaterial variance is not fatal.

General rules apply to indictments and informations in prosecutions for violations of statutes relating to poisons.<sup>1</sup> An indictment or information will be held sufficient<sup>2</sup> or insufficient<sup>3</sup> according as it states facts necessary to constitute an offense, or fails to do so. The indictment or information should set forth all the facts required by the statute to establish the offense and the facts necessary to bring defendant within the statutory provisions.<sup>4</sup> On the other hand, allegations charging the offense in the language of the statute, to which specific reference is made, ordinarily are sufficient,<sup>5</sup> at least in the absence of a special demurrer.<sup>6</sup> An indictment is not insufficient because of a failure to allege that accused "willfully and knowingly" had the narcotic in his possession where the statute does not use those words in defining the crime, but makes the mere possession of the narcotic, except in certain circumstances, an offense.<sup>7</sup>

Intent. In accordance with the general rule, as discussed in Indictments and Informations § 134, when the act, in general terms, is made indictable, a criminal intent need not be alleged unless from the language and effect of the law a purpose to require the allegation of such intent can be discovered.<sup>8</sup>

Age or name of purchaser or seller. An information has been held not fatally defective because of an absence of any statement of the age of the purchaser to whom a narcotic was alleged to have been unlawfully sold.<sup>9</sup> In some jurisdictions it is narcotics constitutes matter of defense.—People v. Kinsley, 5 P.2d 938, 118 Cal.App. 593.

1. Osteopath exceeding his authority

An indictment of licensed osteopath, exceeding his authority as such and invading field of medicine by prescribing narcotics, should charge violation of act making it misdemeanor to practice medicine without license, instead of violation of Anti-Narcotic Act.—Commonwealth v. Cohen, 15 A.2d 730, 142 Pa.Super. 199.

Fraud

Information, charging that defendant knew that name of person for whom drug was prescribed and name of prescribing physician were fraudulent and placed on prescription by forgery, sufficiently charged defendant with fraud so as to sustain a conviction of attempt to obtain narcotic drugs by fraud; and it was unnecessary to allege ownership or possession of drugs in some person, since offense charged did not involve attempt to injure anyone in respect of obtaining or converting property.—State v. Logan, 83 P.2d 1035, 59 Nev. 24.

Falsification of dispensation record Count of indictment charging defendant with falsifying his narcotic dispensation record by omitting therefrom designated amounts of certain drugs which were dispensed by him between stated dates was sufficient, although it did not state time and place and person of each separate dispensation.—Mitchell v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 143 F.2d 953.

False or forged prescription

Under a statute providing that no person shall make or utter any false or forged prescription or written order for any narcotic drug, it must be alleged that the instrument was forged and that accused knew that the instrument was false and forged.—Beasley v. State, 30 So.2d 379, 158 Fla. 824.

necessary to name the purchaser, where known, in an indictment charging sale of poison or narcotic drugs in violation of a statute,<sup>10</sup> while in others an indictment or information will not be quashed because the purchaser is not named.<sup>11</sup> It is not necessary in all cases to set forth the name of the person actually making the sale.<sup>12</sup> In some jurisdictions an objection to an information in that it fails to disclose to whom the narcotic was sold must be raised by a special demurrer and cannot be raised by a general demurrer.<sup>13</sup>

Particular kind of drug. According to some authorities, the allegations should charge not merely the possession or sale of "narcotic drugs," but should name the particular kind or character of the drug possessed or sold;<sup>14</sup> but there is also authority to the contrary.<sup>15</sup> It has been held that, where a specific drug is named, the possession of which is forbidden by statute, there need be no allegation that it was a narcotic drug.<sup>16</sup> Possession of the right quality and kind of marijuana is a positive factor which must be alleged under some statutes.<sup>17</sup>

Quantity. Where the quantity of a narcotic drug is part of the description of the offense, the indictment should show that the drug in question was possessed in a prohibited quantity.<sup>18</sup> However, where the statutes prohibit the sale or possession of preparations containing a narcotic in any amount, except under certain stated conditions, an allegation that a preparation in defendant's possession contained more than a specified number of grains of the narcotic to the ounce is surplusage and of no legal effect.<sup>19</sup>

Negating exceptions or exemptions. In general, particularly under statutes in effect so providing or making exceptions or exemptions matters of defense, an indictment or information need not negative an exception or exemption contained in the statute.<sup>20</sup> Thus ordinarily it need not be alleged that possession or sale of a narcotic was not on a proper prescription.<sup>21</sup> An exception must be negated, however, where its inclusion is necessary to a complete definition or description of the offense.<sup>22</sup>

Bill of particulars. The granting or refusal of an application for a bill of particulars in a prosecution for violation of a narcotic statute ordinarily rests within the sound discretion of the court.<sup>23</sup> A request for a bill of particulars is sometimes proper where the allegations charge possession of a narcotic drug but do not specify the drug.<sup>24</sup>

Issues, proof, and variance. Proof of possession of opium will not sustain a conviction under an indictment charging possession of a preparation containing morphine;<sup>25</sup> and proof of past possession will not suffice under a statute prohibiting present possession;<sup>26</sup> nor will a proof of sale of heroin sustain a conviction under a statute regulating the sale of cocaine or eucaine, or their salts,

Allegations held sufficient

An information, charging that defendant did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously sell narcotic drugs, namely, "marijuana," in quantity exceeding one ounce, to named person, was broad enough to sustain conviction of peddling such drugs under Uniform Narcotic Drug Act, although such act does not name marijuana as narcotic drug, since its definition of "cannabis," denominated as narcotic drug therein, embraces marijuana.—State v. Economy, 130 P.2d 264, 61 Nev. 394.

in the absence of proof that heroin is one of the elements of such substances.<sup>27</sup> Under an indictment charging illegal importation, accused cannot be convicted of illegal possession with which he is not charged and which is not an element of the crime of importation.<sup>28</sup>

On the other hand, if the evidence establishes the gist of the offense, it is sufficient.<sup>29</sup> Thus, a charge of a sale of morphine, a derivative of opium, is sustained by proof of sale of morphine sulphate, a substance which is a subdivision of morphine.<sup>30</sup> Where the proof shows that a purchaser of a narcotic was known by the name alleged in the indictment, there is no variance notwithstanding it was not the true name of the purchaser.<sup>31</sup> Where neither time nor place is an essential element of illegal possession, a variation in the allegation and proof touching time and place is not material.<sup>32</sup> A variance between the indictment and the proof as to the exact quantity of the narcotic sold has been held immaterial.<sup>33</sup> Where a statute, by different sections, makes it a distinct offense to smoke opium and to possess paraphernalia for smoking, a conviction for possession of the paraphernalia will be sustained notwithstanding the proof showed that defendant was smoking opium.<sup>34</sup> Under an indictment containing two counts, one charging possession of a narcotic and the other charging a sale thereof, evidence of the sale, as well as the possession, of the narcotic is admissible.<sup>35</sup>

c. Evidence

- (1) Presumptions and burden of proof
- (2) Admissibility
- (3) Weight and sufficiency

(1) Presumptions and Burden of Proof

General rules govern as to presumptions and burden of proof in a prosecution for violation of a criminal statute relating to poisons, except as they may be varied by any presumptions created by the statutes defining the particular offense.

General rules apply as to the burden of proof,<sup>36</sup> and presumptions,<sup>37</sup> in cases of this character, except as they may be varied by the presumptions, if any, created by the statutes defining the particular offense, such, for example, as that possession shall be prima facie evidence of an intent to sell or dispense,<sup>38</sup> or shall be presumptive evidence of a violation of the act,<sup>39</sup> or of unlawful use;<sup>40</sup> or that a sale was not made to one of an excepted class<sup>41</sup> or on a proper prescription.<sup>42</sup> The finding of a narcotic among defendant's effects will support an inference,<sup>43</sup> but does not give rise to a conclusive presumption<sup>44</sup> that it was there with defendant's knowledge.

Where the statute relating to poisons or narcotic drugs contains exceptions, a defendant desiring to avail himself of any of them by way of defense must show that he comes within its intent.<sup>45</sup> Thus, the burden is on one accused of illegal possession to show that his possession was lawful under a proviso

Variance held not fatal

Where information charged felonious possession of a "preparation of cocaine," proof of felonious possession of "cocaine" was held not fatal variance, since statute penalized possession of either and defendant was not misled.—People v. Bill, 35 P. 2d 645, 140 Cal.App. 389.

Falsification of narcotic dispensation record

Where defendant was charged with falsifying his narcotic dispensation record, all that the government was required to do was to prove that the record was false.—Mitchell v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 143 F.2d 953.

Proof of quantity held unnecessary

Where defendant was charged with unlawfully possessing flowering tops and leaves of Indian hemp, commonly known as marijuana, in violation of a particular statute, and not with unlawful possession of any extract, tincture, or other narcotic preparation as mentioned in another statute, the state was not required to prove that the items found and testified to contained two grains or more of marijuana to the avoirdupois ounce.—People v. Oliver, 152 P.2d 329, 66 Cal.App.2d 431.

36. Possession

In a prosecution for unlawful possession, the burden of proving possession by accused rests on the prosecution.—State v. Helmer, 8 P.2d 412, 166 Wash. 602.

Shifting of burden

In prosecution for violating statute making it a misdemeanor to lay out poison except in a safe place on one's own premises, burden never shifts to defendant to show that poison was placed in a safe place.—Voegele v. State, 133 P.2d 219, 75 Okl. Cr. 420.

or exception of the statute under which he is being prosecuted,<sup>46</sup> or, where the animus possidendi is an element of the offense, to show honest ignorance of the fact of possession.<sup>47</sup> So, an accused who defends on the ground, made available by an exception in the statute, that possession or a sale was on a proper prescription,<sup>48</sup> or that a sale was made to a licensed physician<sup>49</sup> or for a legitimate purpose,<sup>50</sup> or a physician, who defends under a like exception, on the ground that a narcotic drug was administered by him in good faith,<sup>51</sup> has the burden of proving such matter of defense.

(2) Admissibility

The admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for violations of statutes relating to poisons is governed by the rules applicable to the admissibility of evidence in criminal prosecutions generally.

General rules apply as to the admissibility of evidence.<sup>52</sup> Hence, under rules touching the competency of expert witnesses and the admissibility of opinion evidence, expert testimony is admissible<sup>53</sup> to show the character<sup>54</sup> or the effect of a drug,<sup>55</sup> or whether a certain use thereof is legitimate or proper medical practice;<sup>56</sup> and, in a prosecution for sale of a narcotic drug, proof of other sales has been held admissible<sup>57</sup> to show intent,<sup>58</sup> but not where the guilty intent is proved by proving the commission of the act itself.<sup>59</sup> A confession,<sup>60</sup> an offer to plead guilty,<sup>61</sup> or an admission by a defendant<sup>62</sup> is admissible against him. Evidence has been held admissible to show the purpose of the possession of a narcotic drug,<sup>63</sup> and to show that narcotics found and seized were put up in packages such as are used by sellers of the drug.<sup>64</sup> Evidence is sometimes admissible to show the character and reputation of a place where narcotics were found<sup>65</sup> or delivered.<sup>66</sup> However, where accused is charged with one specific transaction, the illegal possession of a described quantity of narcotic drugs, not in the nature of a continuing offense, it has been held that proof of the character and general reputation of the place where the narcotics were found is not admissible.<sup>67</sup>

(3) Weight and Sufficiency

As in other criminal cases, the evidence in a prosecution for violation of a statute relating to poisons must be sufficient to show the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

The evidence, as in other criminal cases, must show the guilt of accused beyond a reasonable

Prescription obtained by misrepresentations

One acquiring possession of narcotics on prescription of physician by misrepresenting his condition is presumptively guilty of unlawful possession, and, in prosecution for unlawfully possessing narcotics, burden is on him to show by reasonable and credible explanation his lawful possession thereof.—*State v. (5) To establish unlawful possession of a hypodermic syringe.—People, on Complaint of Burke, v. Steinberg, 73 N.Y.S.2d 475, 190 Misc. 413.

Admission

Defendant, who admitted that cigarettes found on him contained marito the sufficiency of the evidence to establish guilt must be resolved in favor of accused.<sup>70</sup> Circumstantial<sup>71</sup> or presumptive<sup>72</sup> evidence, or evidence sufficient under the statute to establish a prima facie case,<sup>73</sup> may be sufficient to sustain a conviction. Guilty knowledge and intent to violate the law may be shown by the facts and circumstances of the case,<sup>74</sup> including the conduct of defendant and any false or misleading statements which he may have made to the arresting officers or others with relation to the material facts.<sup>75</sup> It has been held that the mere possession of a narcotic constitutes substantial evidence to sustain a finding that the possessor of the narcotic knew its nature.<sup>76</sup>

There may be a rebuttal of a presumptive<sup>77</sup> or prima facie<sup>78</sup> case, but it must be of all the possible elements or conditions under which the prima facie case may arise.<sup>79</sup> A defense that accused had no knowledge of the presence of the drug in his possession merely creates a conflict with a prima facie case made out by the prosecution showing possession.<sup>80</sup> While proof of possession of a prohibited drug may require accused to go forward with the evidence to the extent of creating in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt as to whether or not he had unlawfully acquired possession of the drug, if that is his defense rather than denial of possession of the drug,<sup>81</sup> he is not required to go to the extent of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that he lawfully acquired possession of the drug.<sup>82</sup>

d. Trial and Verdict

The trial of a prosecution for violation of statutes relating to poisons is governed by the usual rules in criminal prosecutions, as for example, with respect to such matters as instructions and the province of the court and the jury.

The province of the court and jury in a prosecution for an offense relating to poisons is governed by the rules of the particular jurisdiction as to the functions of the judge and jury in criminal cases generally.<sup>83</sup> Questions of fact are to be tried by the jury,<sup>84</sup> who are the sole judges of the weight to be given the evidence, where it is admissible and sufficient to raise an issue,<sup>85</sup> and of the weight to be given to the testimony of witnesses.<sup>86</sup> Thus, it is ordinarily for the jury to determine from the evidence the question of defendant's guilt in a prosecution for illegal possession or sale of a juana, admitted that cigarettes contained a narcotic referred to in statute making illegal possession of certain narcotics an offense.—People v. Savage, 148 P.2d 654, 64 Cal.App.2d 314.

Probability of testimony

In prosecution for possession of prohibited drugs, testimony of federal narcotic agents was held not so improbable as to be unworthy of belief under evidence showing physical conditions preceding defendant's arrest.—State v. Mah Sam Hing, 295 P. 1014, 89 Mont. 178.

narcotic or habit-forming drug;<sup>87</sup> to determine whether possession of a narcotic was obtained on a prescription for personal use;<sup>88</sup> what constitutes "proper practice" in prescribing narcotics;<sup>89</sup> whether a physician believed drugs obviously were needed in the treatment of persons prescribed for;<sup>90</sup> whether a sufficient degree of care was used by a druggist selling poison to satisfy himself that it was intended for legitimate purposes;<sup>91</sup> and whether a drug was arranged in a form suitable for sale within the meaning of a statute.<sup>92</sup> In the absence of a jury, the weight of the evidence is a matter for determination by the trier of facts.<sup>93</sup> Where the information charges accused in two counts, one for unlawful possession of narcotics with intent to sell and dispose, and the other with unlawfully acquiring the narcotic, a dismissal of the second count, unlawful acquisition, does not require a directed verdict of not guilty on the first.<sup>94</sup>

Instructions. The court should instruct the jury on the issue of fact presented in such manner as will enable them to determine, in view of the defense made by accused, whether or not there has been a violation of the statute under which the prosecution is being conducted.<sup>95</sup> Where the defense is based on an exception in the statute, the instructions should correctly present the exception,<sup>96</sup> and an instruction which excludes from consideration such an exception, which the jury might have found to exist, is erroneous,<sup>97</sup> notwithstanding other instructions cover the exception where they are not connected and harmonized with the former instruction.<sup>98</sup> The instructions should correctly state the evidence<sup>99</sup> and also the law as to the fine and punishment which may be assessed by the jury.<sup>1</sup> Where there is a constitutional prohibition against commenting on the evidence, the court should not instruct the jury to view the testimony of any class of witnesses with caution or suspicion.<sup>2</sup>

Where the statute makes possession prima facie evidence of intent, it is proper to give instructions as to such presumption,<sup>3</sup> and generally instructions conforming to the statute are proper.<sup>4</sup> Notwithstanding the instructions as a whole are sufficient to inform the jury in a general way that defendant's knowledge of the presence of a narcotic in his effects must be shown, the circumstances may be such as to entitle him to a specific instruction indicating the necessity of such knowledge,<sup>5</sup> and it has been held error to read, and subsequently withdraw, an instruction to such effect designed to clarify the law in such a situation.<sup>6</sup>

Verdict. A verdict will ordinarily be liberally construed in the light of the issue made by the pleading.<sup>7</sup> Under an information charging unlawful possession of a narcotic with intent to sell, furnish, or dispose of it, a verdict of "guilty of pos-

e. Sentence and Punishment

The punishment which may be meted out for violation of statutes relating to poisons depends on the terms of the provisions, and, within the limits fixed by such statutes, the particular punishment in a given case rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.

The punishment for violation of statutory provisions relating to poisons depends on the terms of the statutes of the particular jurisdiction,<sup>9</sup> and, within the range fixed by statute, is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court.<sup>10</sup> The discretion is a wide one,<sup>11</sup> and, while its exercise, within proper bounds, ordinarily will not be disturbed,<sup>12</sup> it should not be exercised arbitrarily.<sup>13</sup> A sentence approaching the maximum is not an abuse of discretion,<sup>14</sup> nor is a sentence of imprisonment for possession of narcotics under a state law, notwithstanding prior punishment in a federal court.<sup>15</sup> Although it is the practice of the court to impose only the minimum penalty for a first offense under an antinarcotic law, the rule may be disregarded in a case where a disposition to exploit the vice is shown.<sup>16</sup> Where the statute fixes the punishment at fine or imprisonment, the sentence cannot be both fine and imprisonment.<sup>17</sup> One who has been convicted under an invalid narcotic act cannot be held in custody on the ground that he violated a prior statute on the subject, where such prior statute relates only to second offenders and he was not charged with a second offense.<sup>18</sup>

a. Sales, Distribution, and Labeling

The guilt or innocence of one charged with a violation of a statute regulating the sale or distribution of poison depends on whether the accused's acts were such as to bring him within the terms of the statute.

The guilt or innocence of one charged with a violation of a statute regulating the sale, giving away, or distribution of poison depends on whether, by a fair construction, the facts of the particular case bring defendant within the provisions of the statute or statutory regulation.<sup>19</sup> Thus, whether a person "sells" or is engaged in selling poison or a narcotic drug depends on whether his acts are within the terms of the statute on a reasonable construction.<sup>20</sup> By like construction it is to be determined whether one is guilty of a violation of a statute making it an offense to give away,<sup>21</sup> dispose of,<sup>22</sup> or furnish<sup>23</sup> a narcotic drug, or the means of using it.<sup>24</sup> Like principles are applicable in determining whether there has been a violation of a statute requiring the recordation of a sale of poison,<sup>25</sup> or prohibiting mislabeling or misbranding of poison.<sup>26</sup>

b. Prescriptions

Resort must be had to the statutes of the particular jurisdiction to determine whether the issuance of a prescription for a dangerous drug, or the sale or furnishing of a poison without a prescription, constitutes a criminal offense.

The statutes regulating the issuance of prescriptions for poison and narcotic and dangerous drugs contain varied provisions, and resort must be had to the statutes to determine under the facts of any given case whether the issuance of a prescription<sup>27</sup> or the sale<sup>28</sup> or furnishing<sup>29</sup> of a poison or drug without a prescription is unlawful. Under a statute permitting an exception in favor of a sale of narcotics on a written prescription, it is no defense to a prosecution against a pharmacist for an unlawful sale that the doctor telephoned to let the purchaser have the narcotic.<sup>30</sup> One who sells a poisonous drug to another without a prescription is guilty of the offense without reference to whether he is the proprietor of a drugstore or merely the employee of such proprietor.<sup>31</sup> Possession which was originally lawful because it was obtained on a valid prescription may become unlawful after the death of the patient for whom the prescription was issued.<sup>32</sup>

Medical treatment of addicts. Statutes making it unlawful to furnish to or prescribe narcotic and habit-forming drugs for habitual users thereof usually contain an exemption permitting the prescribing of such drugs to habitual users under treatment for addiction;<sup>33</sup> and, under these statutes it is held that, if the drug is prescribed in good faith to an addict under the professional care of the physician, and without any intent to evade the purpose of the act, there is no violation of the statute.<sup>34</sup> However, even in such cases the physician may not prescribe an amount in excess of that limited by the act as a daily treatment.<sup>35</sup>

offense for any person, knowing a physician's prescription to have been falsely made, to present it to a druggist with intent to procure a narcotic drug;<sup>36</sup> and a drug addict has no more right to procure a narcotic by a false prescription, even though it is issued by a doctor from whom he is taking treatment, than any other person.<sup>37</sup> A prescription made in the name of a fictitious person, and unlawfully indorsed, in order to procure a narcotic drug, is a false prescription within the condemnation of the statute.<sup>38</sup> A statute of this nature, where confined by its terms to narcotic drugs, cannot be made the basis of a prosecution for obtaining a different kind of drug by the use of a false or forged prescription.<sup>39</sup>

c. Possession and Use

In most jurisdictions the possession or use of narcotic and habit-forming drugs is unlawful except on the conditions and for the purposes specified by statute.

Under the statutes in most jurisdictions the possession or use of narcotic and habit-forming drugs is unlawful except on the conditions and for the purposes specified by the statutes.<sup>40</sup> Illegal sale and illegal possession constitute two different crimes under statutes prohibiting sale and possession of poisons or drugs.<sup>41</sup> Likewise, the provision of the Uniform Narcotic Drug Act making it an offense to obtain or to attempt to obtain a narcotic drug by fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, or subterfuge describes a crime distinct from the offense denounced by the provision of the act dealing with unlawful possession.<sup>42</sup> Merely being in possession, without a license, of opium and paraphernalia for smoking is sufficient to constitute a violation of the law.<sup>43</sup> Where the prohibitory statutes are not limited in their application to those persons who prescribe, dispense, deal in, and distribute narcotic drugs, but provide broadly that no person, unless authorized, shall possess a narcotic drug, an ordinary individual who is a possessor of a narcotic drug is amenable to the law.<sup>44</sup> Under some statutes the only perfect defense to a prosecution for possession is a valid prescription under the act.<sup>45</sup>

In general, in order to sustain a conviction for possession, the animus possidendi must be present.<sup>46</sup> In order that possession of a prohibited drug may constitute a violation of the statutes, the possession ordinarily must be immediate and exclusive, and the drug must be under the dominion and control of the person charged with possession.<sup>47</sup> However, exclusive possession need not be shown where two or more parties are jointly charged,<sup>48</sup> and, hence, one is guilty of violating a statute prohibiting the possession of narcotic drugs where such drug is found in the joint possession of him and another.<sup>49</sup>

Possession of a prohibited drug ordinarily is established when it is shown that a person has physical control thereof with intent to exercise such control, or, having had such physical control, has not abandoned it and no other person has that possession.<sup>50</sup> The possession may be constructive, as well as actual,<sup>51</sup> and it is not indispensable to a conviction for unlawful possession to show that accused had the illegal drug on his person;<sup>52</sup> nor is possession at the very time of arrest essential.<sup>53</sup>

Substances embraced. Marijuana is ordinarily embraced within a statute prohibiting the possession of narcotics without a written prescription,<sup>54</sup> but, under some statutes, possession of marijuana is not a criminal offense unless it is of the specific quality and kind defined by the statute.<sup>55</sup> Some statutes prohibiting the possession of cannabis have been held to prohibit the possession of the green, growing plant and not to be limited in their application to the dried flowering or fruiting tops.<sup>56</sup>

Possession by pharmacist or apothecary. While a pharmacist or apothecary may lawfully possess narcotics,<sup>57</sup> such possession is ordinarily limited to the regular course of his business, that is, the dispensation of narcotics on a proper prescription of a duly licensed physician.<sup>58</sup>

Attempt. Under statutes making it a crime to attempt to commit an offense, it is unlawful for any

§ 9. — Administering, or Mixing with Food or Drink

a. In general

b. Criminal prosecutions

a. In General

It is generally an offense under the statutes to administer to another, or to cause another to take, any poison or other destructive substance with intent to kill or injure.

In most, if not all, jurisdictions there are statutes making it an offense to administer to, or cause to be taken by another any poison, or other destructive substance with intent to kill or injure; and in order to constitute administering with intent to injure, under these statutes, it is not necessary that the poison be administered with the specific intent to do bodily harm, but it is sufficient if it is administered as a means for the accomplishment of another unlawful purpose.<sup>60</sup> Where one administers the poison with a malicious purpose, he may be guilty, even though ignorant of the poisonous nature of the substance.<sup>61</sup> It is not absolutely necessary that there should be an actual delivery of the poison to another.<sup>62</sup> It is immaterial whether the one taking the poison was caused to take it by being overcome by force,<sup>63</sup> or overreached by fraud,<sup>64</sup> or took it willingly to commit suicide, if furnished for that purpose,<sup>65</sup> and, where taken by another in the presence, and by direction, of accused, it is his act of administering.<sup>66</sup> Where poison is left intentionally, to be taken by another who takes it, it is administered.<sup>67</sup>

Entering the stomach. Administering does not take place within the statute unless some portion of the poison actually enters the stomach of the person for whom it was intended,<sup>68</sup> but, where the poison is actually taken by the person whom accused intended to kill, there can be no question of the completion of the offense, even though the dose is insufficient.<sup>69</sup>

Extent of injury. When poison is administered and operates to derange the healthy organization of the system, temporarily or permanently, it is an injury within a statute making it an offense to administer poison to another with intent to injure.<sup>70</sup>

Mixing with food or drink. In many jurisdictions there are statutes making it a criminal offense to mingle poisons or other noxious substances with food, drink, or medicine with intent to injure or kill another,<sup>71</sup> and, under these statutes, administering forms no part of the offense,<sup>72</sup> which is complete when the mingling has taken place, coupled with the intent to injure,<sup>73</sup> even though the amount of poison or noxious substance mingled was not sufficient to cause injury.<sup>74</sup>

What constitutes food or drink. The word "food" as used in such statutes has been defined as any article used as food or drink by man, whether simple, mixed, or compound, including food adjuncts, such as condiments and spices.<sup>75</sup> It is not necessary that the article should then be in condition for immediate human consumption without further process.<sup>76</sup>

b. Criminal Prosecutions

Prosecutions for administering poison, or mingling poison with food, drink, or medicine, are governed by the rules applicable in criminal cases generally.

General rules apply and govern in prosecutions for administering poison, or mingling poison with food, drink, or medicine.<sup>77</sup> It is no defense that accused, after mingling poison with food, attempted

71. "Injury" as including "kill"

The word "injury," as used in statute punishing every person who willfully mingles any poison with any food, drink, or medicine, with intent that the poison shall be taken by any human to his injury, is broad enough to include in its scope the word to remove it, but was prevented;<sup>78</sup> nor that a greater injury was produced than was anticipated.<sup>79</sup>

"kill."—Minter v. State, 129 P.2d 210, 75 Okl.Cr. 133.

An indictment in which the charge is so laid as to bring the case precisely within the description of the offense as given in the statute, and alleging all the essential requisites that constitute it, is sufficient,<sup>80</sup> and, when this is done, other matters need not be alleged.<sup>81</sup> One who has allegedly poisoned another's food, which was not eaten, should be charged with a violation of the statute punishing one who willfully poisons food, rather than under a general statute dealing with attempts to commit crimes, where the general attempt statute by its terms is applicable only if no other provision is made by law for the punishment of an attempt.<sup>82</sup>

Evidence. The general rules of evidence in criminal cases apply.<sup>83</sup> The evidence must establish the fact that the substance was of the character denounced by the statute,<sup>84</sup> and was administered, or mingled in the food, drink, or medicine, by accused.<sup>85</sup> In a prosecution for administering poison to another, proof of a chemical analysis of the contents of the stomach should be adduced, if possible.<sup>86</sup>

Questions of fact. The intent<sup>87</sup> and guilt<sup>88</sup> of accused are questions for the jury.

Instructions are governed by the usual rules applicable in criminal cases.<sup>89</sup> Instructions which do not correctly present the question of intent are properly refused.<sup>90</sup>

§ 10. Offenses under Particular Federal Statutes and Prosecutions Therefor

Questions relating to criminal offenses under particular federal statutes are to be determined in the light of the statutory provisions and the facts of the case.

Questions relating to criminal offenses under particular federal statutes, and prosecutions therefor, are to be determined in the light of the language of the statutes and the particular facts of the case.<sup>91</sup> Under the Opium Poppy Control Act, 21 U.S.C.A. § 188 et seq, the production of opium poppies is prohibited except under license issued by the secretary of the treasury or his designated agent;<sup>92</sup> and the act has been held constitutional as necessary and proper for carrying into execution a treaty with foreign powers designed to eradicate the opium evil through the exercise of control over the production and distribution of raw opium.<sup>93</sup> The act is directed to the growth of opium yielding poppy plants within the United States as the source, not of an edible food product, but rather of raw opium,<sup>94</sup> and its validity does not depend on the finding of constitutional authority in congress to regulate a food product.<sup>95</sup>

91. Marihuana Act

(1) In order to authorize conviction for making an illegal transfer of marihuana in violation of the Marihuana Tax Act, the government was not required to prove that a formal demand had been made on defendant for a written order of transfer, but it was sufficient to establish that a request for the order form was made subsequent to the transfer and that defendant had no such order form.—Hensley v. U. S., 160 F.2d 257, 82 U.S.App.D.C. 14, certiorari denied 67 S.Ct. 1305, 331 U.S. 817, 91 L.Ed. 1835, rehearing denied 67 S.Ct. 1530, 331 U.S. 867, 91 L.Ed. 1871.

(2) An indictment charging violations of Marihuana Act was not defective in that it charged that sale of the drug was not made in pursuance of a written order on a form issued in blank for that purpose "by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue", whereas the act requires that the form be issued by the secretary of treasury, in view of fact that the power to prescribe the order form had been delegated to the commissioner of internal revenue pursuant to authority contained in the Act.—Kinnison v. U. S., 158 F.2d 403, 81 U.S.App.D.C. 312, certiorari denied 67 S.Ct. 966, 330 U.S. 834, 91 L.Ed. 1281.

Wisdom or success of legislation

The constitutionality of Opium Poppy Control Act does not depend on the wisdom or success of such legislation as a method of discharging obligation of United States under International Opium Convention of 1912 to control production and distribution of raw opium, as long as a rationally sound basis exists for congressional determination that such legislation is appropriately related to the discharge of constitutional powers.—Stutz v. Bureau of Narcotics of Department of Treasury of U. S., supra.

§ 11. — Anti-Narcotic Act

- a. In general
- b. Validity of act and regulations thereunder
- c. Particular offenses under act
- d. Criminal prosecutions

a. In General

The declared object of the anti-narcotic act is to provide revenue, and whatever moral effect is attained by the law is incidental to its operation as a revenue measure. The act should be construed as a whole and with a view to avoiding a conclusion of unconstitutionality.

The declared object of the federal narcotic law, commonly known as the Harrison Narcotic Act or the Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act, is to provide revenue;<sup>96</sup> and, although its purpose has been said to be to restrict the distribution of narcotics to medical purposes only,<sup>97</sup> to minimize the spread of addiction to the use of drugs,<sup>98</sup> and to accomplish a moral purpose,<sup>99</sup> whatever moral effect is attained by the law is purely incidental to its operation as a revenue measure.<sup>1</sup> Direct control of medical practice in the states is beyond the power of the federal government,<sup>2</sup> and incidental regulation of such practice by congress through a taxing act cannot extend to matters inappropriate and unnecessary to reasonable enforcement of the measure;<sup>3</sup> hence, the act will not be construed to be a regulation of professional conduct.<sup>4</sup> In accordance with the principle that a statute must be construed, if fairly possible, so as to avoid not only the conclusion that it is unconstitutional,<sup>5</sup> but also to avoid grave doubts as to its constitutionality,<sup>6</sup> the act will be assumed to be a taxing measure,<sup>7</sup> since congress has no power to restrain the purchase of opiates and other drugs.<sup>8</sup>

In determining whether the statutory provisions have been violated, the original anti-narcotic act and the amendments thereto should be construed as a whole.<sup>9</sup> Those provisions of the act which regulate and restrict traffic in the outlaw drug, and which are criminal provisions, should be strictly construed.<sup>10</sup> A single sale of narcotics by a person not authorized to sell them constitutes a crime.<sup>11</sup> The act is not aimed at all purchases or sales of the specified drugs,<sup>12</sup> but at sales of such drugs in violation of the statutory requirements, enacted as aids to the enforcement of the taxes imposed by the act;<sup>13</sup> and all those persons who register and pay the taxes required of them in their several classes may lawfully purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute narcotic drugs in or from an original stamped package.<sup>14</sup>

Failure to register and pay tax see infra subdivision c (1) of this section.

Selling or purchasing from unstamp-

What constitutes sale. The word "sale" in the anti-narcotic act is used in its ordinary and popular sense.<sup>15</sup> It has been held that there is a sale within the meaning of the act when the parties have agreed on all terms of sale of the narcotic and nothing remains but payment by the buyer, although the seller retains possession until payment,<sup>16</sup> and where, if the transaction were a lawful one, seller could maintain an action for the purchase price of the goods.<sup>17</sup> In any event, such circumstances are sufficient to show an unlawful dealing in narcotics.<sup>18</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that a sale of narcotics under the act is not complete unless either the purchase price has been paid or the property delivered.<sup>19</sup>

"Selling," within the meaning of the statute, is not confined to parting with one's own property.<sup>20</sup> The delivery or transfer of a narcotic hypodermically and the receipt of payment for such hypodermic injection has been held to have all the component parts of a sale.<sup>21</sup> A sale is complete when the drug is delivered on the buyer's direction, even though the drug is not personally handled by the buyer.<sup>22</sup>

Exempt preparations and remedies. The anti-narcotic act exempts from its operation the manufacture, sale, distribution, giving away, dispensing, or possession of certain preparations and remedies which do not contain more than a prescribed amount of a narcotic drug,<sup>23</sup> provided this is done for medicinal purposes and the manufacturer, producer, compounding, or vendor, including a dispensing physician, keeps a record.<sup>24</sup> Under this provision, not all physicians, but only "dispensing" physicians, are required to keep records;<sup>25</sup> the physician must be one who manufactures, produces, compounds, or vends, or possibly only one who vends, the drugs,<sup>26</sup> and no record need be kept by physicians administering to patients whom they personally attend.<sup>27</sup> The words "preparations and remedies," as used in this provision, have been construed to mean actual medicinal preparations and remedies such as a druggist or physician would normally dispense.<sup>28</sup>

The validity of the federal anti-narcotic act has frequently been upheld; and under it needful administrative regulations may be made which have the effect of law.

The constitutionality of the act has been upheld in numerous decisions as a valid exercise by congress of the authority given it by the Constitution<sup>29</sup> to enforce an excise tax,<sup>30</sup> and as not being a mere attempt to invade,<sup>31</sup> or an invasion of,<sup>32</sup> a power not delegated, the reserved police power of the states; and, the legislation being within the taxing power of congress, it is not a matter of objection that its effect may be to accomplish another purpose as well as the raising of revenue.<sup>33</sup> Provisions genuinely calculated to aid in enforcing the revenue features of the act, such as the provision prohibiting the retail sale of narcotics without a prescription,<sup>34</sup> or a sale except on the written order of the buyer on a prescribed form,<sup>35</sup> and regardless of whether or not the buyer is one of the class required to register under the act,<sup>36</sup> have been held valid, as have the administrative features of the act.<sup>37</sup>

Regulations under act. Congress has empowered the secretary of the treasury to make all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of the act;<sup>38</sup> and the secretary of the treasury is further authorized to confer his powers respecting regulations on the commissioner of narcotics or the commissioner of internal revenue.<sup>39</sup> A regulation which is needful and made in pursuance of carrying the statute into effect has the effect of law, violation of which may be the subject of a criminal penalty.<sup>40</sup> In general, if the regulation fulfills the purpose of the law, and is not in effect an addition to or limitation on it, it is valid.<sup>41</sup> A regulation requiring the name and address of a person on a prescription by which he obtains narcotics has been held reasonable, proper, and needful.<sup>42</sup> So, too, a ruling of the commissioner of internal revenue excluding from the exemption of registered physicians whose who, as a rule, do not see their patients, but base most of their prescriptions on written statements sent through the mail and who prescribe the same remedy for all alike, has been upheld.<sup>43</sup>

On the other hand, only such rules or regulations as are required for the enforcement of the act are valid under this provision.<sup>44</sup> A regulation specifying the drugs or the quantity thereof which a physician may prescribe to an addict, or specifying the frequency of prescriptions, would be not only contrary to the law, but would also make the law unconstitutional as being clearly a regulation of the practice of medicine;<sup>45</sup> and a rule requiring a physician to be in personal attendance on a patient "away from his office" to come within the exemption of the provision, requiring a physician to keep a record of drugs dispensed or distributed "except such as may be dispensed or distributed to a patient upon whom such physician . . . shall personally attend," has been held void, as contrary to the language of the act and not necessary to its enforcement.<sup>46</sup>

c. Particular Offenses under Act

- (1) Failure to register and pay tax
- (2) Selling or purchasing from unstamped package
- (3) Absence or misuse of order forms
- (4) Possession

(1) Failure to Register and Pay Tax

Under the anti-narcotic act it is an offense for one to manufacture, sell, deal in, or distribute certain narcotic drugs without registering with the collector of internal revenue and paying the special tax required by the act.

Under the anti-narcotic act every person who imports, manufactures, produces, compounds, sells, deals in, dispenses, or gives away certain narcotic drugs listed therein must register with the collector of internal revenue of the district, and pay a special tax.<sup>47</sup> This section applies to such persons as dealers, physicians, dentists, veterinarians, and other practitioners, who may lawfully deal in or handle narcotics;<sup>48</sup> and no one is required to register ex-

Single Infraction

An unregistered person of the class required to register, who gives away morphine, although in only a single instance, is indictable for failure to register.—Weare v. U. S., C.C.A. Minn., 1 F.2d 617—Bethea v. U. S., C.C.A.Ill., 1 F.2d 290.

On whom tax imposed

The tax is imposed not on a retail purchaser for his own use but on importers, manufacturers, producers, dealers, and practitioners, persons who deal in and dispense the drugs.—Nigro v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 117 F. 2d 624, 133 A.L.R. 1128.

Liability as principal

Where defendant had no interest in common with addicts, but admittedly assisted another to make sale of cocaine, he was liable as a principal.—Carpenter v. U. S., C.C.A.Ga., 53 F.2d 174.

Ordinary or dictionary meanings

Words "physician," "dentist," or "veterinary surgeon" in provision requiring such persons to register in order to handle narcotics were used in their ordinary or dictionary meaning.—Flowers v. U. S., supra.

cept those who import, deal in, manufacture, sell, or distribute or give away the narcotics embraced within the act.<sup>49</sup> Accordingly, one who peddles<sup>50</sup> or purchases<sup>51</sup> narcotics from unstamped packages is not required to register, and cannot be convicted for failure to do so. In other words, this section applies to offenses that may be committed only by a limited class of persons, namely, persons eligible and required to register under the provisions of the act;<sup>52</sup> only those who dispense from stamped packages and constitute the classes which must pay taxes.<sup>53</sup>

Under the anti-narcotic act and departmental regulations, registration is permitted by, and limited to, physicians, and other practitioners or persons qualified or authorized under the laws of the various jurisdictions to distribute, dispense, give away, or administer narcotics.<sup>54</sup> Thus the right to register and pay a tax under the statute depends on the right to dispense under the state laws.<sup>55</sup> Neither a collector of internal revenue nor any other administrative officer has a discretion to refuse registration to a practicing physician licensed under the laws of a state.<sup>56</sup> The word "dispense" in the act applies to physicians, and they must register under the act,<sup>57</sup> and a physician who dispenses and who is also a dealer in narcotic drugs must register as both under the act;<sup>58</sup> but a physician who does not dispense narcotics is not required to register.<sup>59</sup> An

osteopath who is not authorized to use narcotic drugs under the statutes of the particular state is not entitled to register under the anti-narcotic act,<sup>60</sup> whereas an osteopath authorized to use narcotics under the state law is entitled to registration.<sup>61</sup>

Those persons required to register must do so according to their manner of dealing, and the amount of taxes payable by them differs as their manner of dealing differs.<sup>62</sup> No one registered in his particular statutory category may lawfully invade the field of those in other categories, since his registration and the amount of the tax paid fix his status.<sup>63</sup>

Place of registration. One registering under the act must register in the district where the business is to be carried on, notwithstanding his "place of business" or "office" may be elsewhere.<sup>64</sup>

(2) Selling or Purchasing from Unstamped Package

It is unlawful under the federal anti-narcotic act for any person to purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute, except in or from an original stamped package, any of the drugs mentioned in the act.

Under the federal anti-narcotic act it is unlawful to purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute any of the drugs mentioned in the act, except in or from original stamped packages.<sup>65</sup> This provision is of general application and applies to all persons,<sup>66</sup> and is not limited to those required to register and pay a special tax.<sup>67</sup>

One who has registered and paid the tax required of persons in the class to which the handler belongs may purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute, as his registration may contemplate, provided he does so in or from the original stamped package.<sup>68</sup> A person who is registered is not, in order that he may lawfully sell, required to sell both in and from an original stamped package,<sup>69</sup> and a sale of drugs does not constitute a crime under this particular section, even though it is made in an unstamped package, unless it is made also from an unstamped package.<sup>70</sup> Wholesalers may sell in the original stamped package,<sup>71</sup> but they are not allowed to sell by retail from such a package;<sup>72</sup> retail dealers may sell or dispense from, but not in, the original stamped package;<sup>73</sup> registered physicians and others of that class may administer from an original stamped package, but may not sell in such a package.<sup>74</sup> In short, some may lawfully sell and handle in, and some from, an original stamped package, depending on their registration, but not both in and from.<sup>75</sup>

Intent. Knowledge is a necessary element to constitute an offense under these provisions relating to sales, purchases, or dispensing from unstamped packages, and one who innocently buys drugs in containers bearing counterfeit revenue stamps is not guilty of a violation.<sup>76</sup>

(3) Absence or Misuse of Order Forms

Except in certain circumstances, it is unlawful under the anti-narcotic act to sell, barter, or give away any of the drugs mentioned in the act unless in pursuance of a written order on a prescribed form. A written order is not necessary in the case of dispensing or distribution of a narcotic by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon in good faith in the course of his professional practice.

The act, with certain exceptions, forbids the selling, bartering, exchanging, or giving away of the drugs mentioned except in pursuance of a written order on a prescribed form,<sup>77</sup> and also makes it unlawful for any person to obtain by means of the prescribed order forms any of the prohibited drugs for any purpose other than the use, sale, or distribution thereof in the conduct of a lawful business in such drugs or in the legitimate practice of a profession.<sup>78</sup> This provision applies not only to registered dealers, but to all sellers<sup>79</sup> and to single sales.<sup>80</sup> Criminal intent is not an element of the offense of selling narcotics in violation of the provision requiring a written order on a prescribed form.<sup>81</sup> A sale knowingly made on fictitious and forged orders constitutes a sale within the inhibition of the act.<sup>82</sup> Where there is a sale in violation of the act, it is immaterial that there was no actual loss of revenue by the government;<sup>83</sup> and, where money is paid by government agents for purchase of a narcotic sold in violation of the act, it is immaterial that in making the purchase they intended to take the money on the arrest of the seller and hold it for evidence.<sup>84</sup>

Knowledge of diversion of narcotic

Where a physician regularly and with unusual frequency ordered from a wholesale drug dealer one thousand one-half grain tablets of morphine sulphate at a time, and physician, with negligible exceptions, ordered no other preparations from dealer, dealer was bound to know that physician was diverting morphine into unlawful channels, particularly after dealer was told that twenty-six and ninety-six one hundredths per cent of all physicians convicted of violations of narcotic laws were dealer's customers.—U. S. v. Direct Sales Co., supra.

Use of drugs in professional practice. By virtue of an exception in the statute, a written order is not necessary in the case of dispensing or distribution of a narcotic by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon in the course of his professional practice.<sup>85</sup> However, a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon may not sell or dispense the drugs mentioned in the act without the order on the prescribed form, except in the course of his professional practice<sup>86</sup> in good faith;<sup>87</sup> and he must make and keep the record required.<sup>88</sup> The only way in which a physician can dispose of a prohibited narcotic which he has ordered from a wholesaler is by direct administration to his patients in the legitimate practice of his profession;<sup>89</sup> he cannot merely sell it<sup>90</sup> or give it away.<sup>91</sup> In order to sustain the physician's privilege, there must be both a patient and a dispensing in the course of professional practice only;<sup>92</sup> and the absence of the element of dispensation in the course of professional practice only will of itself destroy the physician's privilege.<sup>93</sup>

The statute does not prescribe the diseases for which a narcotic may be supplied;<sup>94</sup> nor is there any dogmatic rule which the courts have laid down for the purpose of determining what is good or bad professional practice,<sup>95</sup> and the question of what constitutes bona fide medical practice must be determined on a consideration of the evidence and attending circumstances.<sup>96</sup> What the law punishes is not bad judgment in a physician, but bad faith.<sup>97</sup> In order to be entitled to the benefit of the exception, the practice of the profession must be real and genuine, and resort to it may not be had as a subterfuge to cover an otherwise unlawful dispensing of the taxable drug;<sup>98</sup> and mere pretense of such practice cannot legalize forbidden sales or otherwise nullify valid provisions of the statute,<sup>99</sup> or defeat such regulations as may be fairly appropriate to its enforcement within the proper limitations of a revenue measure.<sup>1</sup>

Dispensation to addicts. A physician who in good faith dispenses small quantities of such a drug to an addict, to be administered for the relief of conditions incident to such addiction, is within the exception;<sup>2</sup> good faith moderate dispensation to an addict for self-administration does not constitute an offense.<sup>3</sup> However, giving or dispensing a drug to which the act applies, for the purpose of satisfying the craving of an addict for the drug, is not dispensing or distributing it in the course of professional practice only so as to come within the exception.<sup>4</sup>

mentioned narcotics a physician may prescribe,<sup>5</sup> there is authority to the effect that a physician issuing, and a dealer filling, a prescription for an unreasonable and unusual amount of a drug to which the act applies, unless the prescription indicates the necessity therefor, would be guilty of a violation of the statute.<sup>6</sup> As has been stated, prescribing grossly inordinate quantities negatives the notion that the physician was in fact administering treatment rather than merely catering to the satisfaction of the drug craving.<sup>7</sup>

Prescriptions. A physician is not guilty of an offense if he issues a prescription in good faith as a physician, believing the recipient to be a bona fide patient, for the purpose of curing disease or relieving suffering.<sup>8</sup> Moreover, it has been held that the mere issuance of a prescription by a physician, even though not in the course of his professional practice,<sup>9</sup> and even though done with the intent and purpose that the person to whom it is given will obtain a drug,<sup>10</sup> is not an offense under the provisions of the act; the filling of the prescription and acquisition of the drug are necessary to constitute the completed offense.<sup>11</sup> However, a sale made by a physician by means of a prescription not issued in the course of his professional practice is unlawful, and, hence, a physician issuing such a prescription may be guilty of an offense where the narcotic is obtained by the use thereof.<sup>12</sup>

In brief, under the guise of treating a patient a physician may not, by issuing prescriptions, make it possible for drugs to be peddled or for known addicts merely to satisfy their craving.<sup>13</sup> Accordingly the court may inquire into the sufficiency and propriety of the reasons assigned by the physician for the issuance of prescriptions for narcotics.<sup>14</sup>

It has been held that a prescription issued by a physician, not in good faith and in the course of his professional practice only, is not a prescription under the exception in favor of a sale, dispensation, or distribution of narcotics by a dealer to a consumer in pursuance of a written prescription issued by a physician,<sup>15</sup> and that a druggist who knowingly fills such a prescription is guilty of a violation of the law,<sup>16</sup> the physician being guilty of aiding and abetting the sale.<sup>17</sup> However, it is further held that the responsibility for issuance of the prescription is on the physician,<sup>18</sup> and that the act does not place on a druggist the burden of inquiry into the intent and purpose of the physician in issuing it.<sup>19</sup> Hence, in the absence of knowledge of unlawful issuance, if the druggist keeps within the limitations of a prescription issued by a registered physician, he is protected thereby.<sup>20</sup>

The statute does not regulate the frequency of prescriptions,<sup>21</sup> or compel a conclusion of bad faith to be drawn in all cases where the prescription is not limited to one dosage or several dosages.<sup>22</sup>

Prescriptions filled after arrest

Where defendant was charged with unlawfully dispensing morphine by issuance of prescriptions to a drug addict, the fact that prescriptions were not filled until after defendant's arrest did not preclude conviction.—U. ## (4) Possession

Mere possession of a narcotic is not made an offense under the anti-narcotic act; but possession coupled with other circumstances, such as failure to register and pay the tax, may constitute an offense.

Although, under certain provisions of the anti-narcotic act, possession of any of the drugs to which it applies will give rise to presumption of a violation thereof, as discussed infra subdivision d (3)(a) of this section, nevertheless mere possession in itself of such drugs,<sup>23</sup> such as having a small amount of opium for personal use,<sup>24</sup> is not made unlawful. However, the act makes possession by one who, although required to register, has not registered and paid the special tax provided for, unlawful per se,<sup>25</sup> and does not merely provide a rule of evidence.<sup>26</sup>

d. Criminal Prosecutions

- (1) Indictments and informations
- (2) Defenses
- (3) Evidence
- (4) Trial
- (5) Sentence and punishment

(1) Indictments and Informations

An indictment under the anti-narcotic act is sufficient if it describes the offense with sufficient clearness to show a violation of law, to enable the accused to know the nature of the accusation, and to plead the judgment in bar of further prosecution.

As in criminal cases generally, it is enough to sustain an indictment, under this statute, that the offense be described with sufficient clearness to show a violation of law, and to enable accused to know the nature and cause of the accusation and to plead the judgment, if one is rendered, in bar of further prosecution;<sup>27</sup> and slight confusion of language will not serve to render an indictment or information uncertain and ambiguous.<sup>28</sup> An indictment charging the offense substantially in the form or language of the statute ordinarily is sufficient, at least where it charges specific overt acts with respect to all the defendants;<sup>29</sup> but the prosecution is not aided by a reference in the indictment to a statutory amendment where the indictment does not charge any facts necessary to bring the case within the purview of the amendment.<sup>30</sup>

Since the mere issuance of a prescription is not an offense under the act, an indictment which charges that a physician issued and wrote a prescription in violation of, and contrary to, the provisions of the act, and not in the course of his professional practice, states no offense;<sup>31</sup> but, where the indictment charges a physician with making a sale without the prescribed order therefor, and by means of a prescription not issued in the course of his professional practice, it is sufficient, since a sale without the order is a violation of the act, even if made under the guise of a prescription.<sup>32</sup> In a prosecution for dealing in narcotics, it is not sufficient to allege merely that accused was a dealer and a person required by law to register and pay the special tax provided; the allegations should go further and aver that accused did not register and pay the tax.<sup>38</sup> An indictment charging accused with having made a sale without registering must charge that he was required to register under the act;<sup>34</sup> but an indictment charging a sale which was not in or from a stamped package<sup>35</sup> or a sale not in pursuance of a written order on the prescribed form<sup>36</sup> need not allege that the seller failed, or was required, to register, since these provisions apply to all persons. An indictment charging a sale of narcotics from unstamped containers need not further allege that the sale was not on a written order.<sup>37</sup> An indictment charging an illegal sale need not specifically state whether the narcotic sold was in a stamped or unstamped package.<sup>38</sup> It is unnecessary for the indictment to allege that accused deprived the government of revenue.<sup>39</sup> In an indictment for selling morphine an allegation that morphine is a salt or a derivative of opium is not necessary.<sup>40</sup>

Duplicity. If the indictment contains a sufficient allegation of an offense under the act, incomplete allegations therein respecting other offenses may be disregarded as surplusage,<sup>41</sup> and such additional allegations, not sufficient in themselves to charge an offense, will not invalidate the indictment as double.<sup>42</sup> An indictment is not double because it charges a sale in one count and transportation in another,<sup>43</sup> or purchase and sale;<sup>44</sup> or because it charges accused with selling and dispensing as a physician in one count, and as a dealer in another.<sup>45</sup>

Time. Where time is an element of the offense, it should be alleged;<sup>46</sup> hence, an indictment for failure to keep records for the time prescribed by the act should bring the offense within the statutory period.<sup>47</sup>

Intent. Where intent or knowledge is not an element of the particular offense under the act, the indictment need not allege it.<sup>48</sup>

Place of sale and identity of purchaser. The place of sale<sup>49</sup> and the identity of the purchaser<sup>50</sup> should be alleged, unless unknown, in which event the sale should be alleged to have been made to a person or persons unknown.<sup>51</sup>

Omission held not fatal

Counts of indictment charging violation in language of the act were not so vague as to be invalid because they described violations in general terms without naming persons to whom the drugs were sold or delivered, although it would have been better practice to name such persons.—Ong v. U. S., C.C.A. Va., 131 F.2d 175.

Sale for use of unspecified addicts. Indictment, charging that drugs were sold to a named purchaser for purpose of satisfying the cravings of unspecified addicts under physician's prescription given in bad faith not in course of his professional practice, was sufficient notwithstanding it did not charge a sale of drugs to a known addict.—U. S. v. Brandenburg, C.C.A. N.J., 155 F.2d 110.

held that an indictment which charges the sale of a preparation of opium, containing two grains of opium to the fluid ounce, and that the preparation was sold not for medicinal purposes, but for the purpose of evading the provisions of the act, is not only sufficient but is unnecessarily specific in negating the exception of sale for medicinal use,<sup>54</sup> and, therefore, that an indictment charging such a sale, but which does not negative a sale for medicinal purpose, is not demurrable.<sup>55</sup> However, it has been held that an indictment for violation of the provisions pertaining to stamped packages must negative a sale "in" and also "from" an original stamped package inasmuch as such exception is contained in the enacting clause of the statute.<sup>56</sup>

Where the indictment does not show accused to be a physician, it need not challenge the rights peculiar to physicians;<sup>57</sup> but an indictment which alleges that defendant was a registered physician and issued prescriptions as such should then go further and negative the physician's privilege.<sup>58</sup> In a prosecution against a physician an allegation that dispensation of the drug was not in the course of his professional practice only is sufficient;<sup>59</sup> such an allegation is not deemed to be a mere conclusion of the pleader,<sup>60</sup> but is rather an allegation of the ultimate fact that the dispensing by the physician was not done by him as a physician.<sup>61</sup>

cific information as to the charge against him,<sup>62</sup> as where the indictment is couched in such language that he may be surprised by the production of evidence for which he is unprepared.<sup>63</sup> So, in a proper case, accused may be entitled to a bill of particulars setting forth the date of possession of a narcotic<sup>64</sup> or the place where it was purchased and delivered.<sup>65</sup> However, the grant or refusal of a bill of particulars in a prosecution for violation of the anti-narcotic law rests in the sound discretion of the court,<sup>66</sup> and a motion for a bill of particulars is properly denied where the counts of the indictment charge the violations as fully as is necessary to enable accused to prepare his defense.<sup>67</sup>

Variance. As in other criminal prosecutions, the question of variance depends on whether there is a material disagreement between the averments of the indictment and the proof of some matter essential to the charge.<sup>68</sup> In a prosecution for an unlawful sale, the allegation and proof as to the identity of the purchaser should be in accord<sup>69</sup> to the end that accused will be protected against a second prosecution for the same offense.<sup>70</sup> Where the offense charged was a sale and the proof showed that defendant issued prescriptions on which narcotics were sold, it was held that there was no variance, or at least no fatal variance.<sup>71</sup> The proof should agree with the indictment as to the narcotic drug alleged in charging the offense.<sup>72</sup> Thus, where the indictment charges a sale of morphine, a conviction cannot be sustained on proof of a sale of

The better practice in drawing up an indictment charging physician with sale of drugs in violation of Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act would have been to include an allegation that the drugs were dispensed by him not in good faith "in the course of his professional practice only," but failure to do so would not render indictment fatally defective.—*Nigro v. Indictment alleging that sales of morphine were not made in course of professional practice, or in good faith, or for legitimate medical purposes, and that buyer was free from any disease for which morphine was indicated, and received drug merely

(2) Defenses

The accused, in a prosecution under the anti-narcotic act, may avail himself of the usual defenses in criminal proceedings, and also any of the exceptions or exemptions contained in the act.

In prosecutions under the anti-narcotic act accused, in addition to availing himself of such defenses as are common in all criminal proceedings, may prove himself within any of the exceptions or exemptions contained in the act.<sup>78</sup> It is not a defense in such a prosecution that drugs were furnished to addicts under the provisions of a state law in conflict with the act,<sup>79</sup> although proof of such circumstance might be a matter to be considered in mitigation of punishment;<sup>80</sup> nor is it a defense that accused's acts were not intended and did not tend to violate or defeat the revenue provisions of the act,<sup>81</sup> or that accused acted as agent for another.<sup>82</sup> In a prosecution charging a sale without registry and payment of the special tax it is no defense that accused tendered the tax required and offered to register, and that the officer had refused to receive the tax or permit registry.<sup>83</sup>

Entrapment. As in other criminal prosecutions, as discussed in Criminal Law § 45, entrapment is a defense in prosecutions under the act in question.<sup>84</sup>

(3) Evidence

- (a) Presumptions
- (b) Burden of proof
- (c) Admissibility
- (d) Weight and sufficiency

(a) Presumptions

In addition to the presumptions common to all criminal prosecutions, a presumption of unlawful sale or purchase arises under the anti-narcotic act from the possession of unstamped narcotics, provided such possession is a conscious one and is personal and exclusive.

In addition to the presumptions common to all criminal prosecutions, a presumption of unlawful sale or purchase arises under the provisions of the act from possession, unstamped, of the drugs mentioned in the act,<sup>85</sup> and the statutory presumption or prima facie evidence rule, arising out of possession of the proscribed drug, has been held to be legal, reasonable, and constitutional.<sup>86</sup> While possession and control create a presumption of unlawful dealing,<sup>87</sup> nevertheless, unless the necessity of registering is shown, possession will not create a presumption under the sections pertaining to a failure to register.<sup>88</sup> The presumptions created by the act are of fact, not of law,<sup>89</sup> and they are rebuttable.<sup>90</sup>

In order to raise the presumption the possession must be personal and exclusive.<sup>91</sup> However, it is held that the possession of a confederate is the possession of a principal defendant,<sup>92</sup> although that of one from whom a mere go-between makes a purchase is not the possession of the go-between.<sup>93</sup> The statutory rule of prima facie evidence becomes operative on proof that the package when sold bore no stamps, and it is not necessary to go further and prove that the narcotic sold was not taken from an original stamped package.<sup>94</sup> Possession sufficient to raise the presumptions may be proved prima facie by acts, conduct, or declarations of the party accused, or by circumstantial evidence;<sup>95</sup> but it has been held that the presumption can arise only from a conscious possession.<sup>96</sup>

Venue. The statutory presumption of an unlawful sale or purchase arising from the possession of an unstamped package has been held not to include the subject of venue;<sup>97</sup> but there is also some authority to the contrary.<sup>98</sup>

(b) Burden of Proof

As in all criminal cases, the burden is on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused, and the burden is on the accused to adduce evidence of distinct and substantial matters of defense.

As in all criminal cases, the burden rests on the prosecution to prove the guilt of accused<sup>99</sup> beyond a reasonable doubt,<sup>1</sup> whereas the burden rests on accused to adduce evidence of distinct and substantial matters of defense<sup>2</sup> or to overcome any presumption adverse to him created by the act.<sup>3</sup> The burden is on accused to prove himself within any exception or exemption contained in the act and on which he relies;<sup>4</sup> and, where accused relies on the defense that a sale shown to have been made by him was made on a written order on the prescribed form,<sup>5</sup> or that he had registered and paid the special tax imposed by the act,<sup>6</sup> or that he was not required to register under the act,<sup>7</sup> or that his possession was not unlawful,<sup>8</sup> he has the burden of proving such defense.

(c) Admissibility

The admissibility of evidence in prosecutions under the federal anti-narcotic act is governed by the rules respecting the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally.

In prosecutions under the act, general rules respecting the admission of evidence in criminal cases apply;<sup>9</sup> and in the application of these rules it has been held that, in a prosecution of a physician for an unlawful sale, evidence as to recognized medical practice is admissible to show that accused did or did not come within the exemption as to dispensing drugs in the course of his professional practice.<sup>10</sup> So, evidence of the quantity of narcotics purchased by a physician,<sup>11</sup> and the record required by law to be kept of his disposition thereof,<sup>12</sup> are admissible on the question whether he was using the drugs in the practice of his profession in good faith, or whether he was engaged in handling them as merchandise.<sup>13</sup> A physician will not be permitted to show that in dispensing narcotics he

Methods of treating drug addiction

In prosecution of physician for issuing to addicts prescriptions for narcotic not on order forms, medical testimony concerning methods of treating drug addiction was properly admitted.—Hawkins v. U. S., C.C.A.Ga., 90 F.2d 551, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 118, 302 U.S. 733, 82 L.Ed. 566.

was complying with a state law,<sup>14</sup> and thus he cannot, for example, show that those to whom he sold drugs were registered as addicts and entitled to have the drugs dispensed to them under a state law.<sup>15</sup>

Violation of the act being provable prima facie by acts, conduct, or declarations of accused, or by circumstantial evidence,<sup>16</sup> testimony showing the circumstances surrounding the transaction is admissible.<sup>17</sup> Testimony as to the delivery and identification of a package of drugs by a purchaser to another government witness, who delivered it to the chemist for analysis, is material and relevant.<sup>18</sup> In the prosecution of a drug company for unlawful sales under the act, it is not proper to admit evidence of the relative volume of narcotic sales of accused as compared with other dealers.<sup>19</sup> Since the act has defined a lawful business in narcotics thereunder, on a prosecution for a violation of the act, evidence varying from the statutory definition will not be admitted to show what constitutes a lawful business.<sup>20</sup>

Other offenses. Proof of other transactions in which accused sold or furnished narcotics is admissible to show that accused was dealing in or dispensing such drugs,<sup>21</sup> as is proof that subsequent to a sale a large quantity of a similar drug was found on the premises of accused.<sup>22</sup> However, evidence that accused, who was an habitual user of a narcotic, had possession of a quantity of the drug months before and in another district, was held not admissible to show unlawful dealing at another time and place.<sup>23</sup>

(d) Weight and Sufficiency

As in other criminal cases, the proof in a prosecution under the federal anti-narcotic act, in order to sustain a conviction, must be sufficient to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt.

There must be proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,<sup>24</sup> and facts and circumstances which merely give rise to suspicion of the guilt of accused are legally insufficient to sustain a conviction.<sup>25</sup> If the evidence is such as to raise a reasonable doubt as to whether the practice followed by a physician was proper or improper, the doubt must be resolved in favor of good faith.<sup>26</sup>

On the other hand, substantial evidence tending to prove each and every material allegation of the indictment will sustain a conviction.<sup>27</sup> Possession by accused, coupled with the presumption arising therefrom, has been held sufficient to sustain a conviction;<sup>28</sup> and it has been held that unlawful sale and possession of narcotics may be proved prima facie by the acts and conduct of accused,<sup>29</sup> or by his declarations or admissions,<sup>30</sup> or by circumstantial evidence.<sup>31</sup> It is not necessary to a successful prosecution for an unlawful sale to show both that the narcotic when sold was not contained in an original stamped package and also that it did not come from an original stamped package;<sup>32</sup> proof of either, as the circumstances call for, will suffice.<sup>33</sup> A conviction for the sale or distribution of smoking opium or opium prepared for smoking, without a written order on the prescribed form, does not require proof of a quantitative as well as a qualitative analysis thereof.<sup>34</sup>

In applying the foregoing rules, particular evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient to establish that accused was dealing in narcotics in violation of the act;<sup>35</sup> that there was a "sale" of

Agent's opinion as to weakness of case. The question of the strength or weakness of the case is a matter to be deduced by the jury from the evidence before it, and not from some opinion held as to its weakness by some agent or agents who do not even testify.<sup>47</sup>

Several counts. In view of the presumption created by the statute, the government makes out a complete case, on proof of a sale, under each count of an indictment which charges failure to register and pay the tax, to secure a written order, or to sell out of an unstamped package;<sup>48</sup> and thus on proof of a single sale, and in the absence of any proof by defendant, the government is entitled

(4) Trial

As in other criminal cases, questions of fact are for the jury in a prosecution under the anti-narcotic act; and in determining whether to take the case from the jury by directing a verdict, the court will take that view of the evidence which is most favorable to the party against whom the direction is asked. The instructions in a prosecution under the anti-narcotic act should distinctly and fairly submit to the jury the questions of fact to be determined by them, and should not invade the province of the jury or be misleading or prejudicial.

As is the general rule in criminal cases, in a prosecution under the narcotic act questions of fact are to be tried by the jury.<sup>50</sup> Thus it is for the determination of the jury whether the treatment of a patient, to whom a physician has dispensed drugs, was in good faith;<sup>51</sup> whether the drugs were dispensed in the course of a physician's professional practice<sup>52</sup> or to pander to the habits of an addict;<sup>53</sup> whether a prescription for a narcotic was issued in good faith;<sup>54</sup> or whether a druggist filling prescriptions knew the true character in which persons having them filled sought to procure the drug, and that they were addicts.<sup>55</sup>

Taking case from jury. In considering a motion to direct a verdict the court will take that view of the evidence which is most favorable to the party against whom the direction is asked;<sup>56</sup> and, if there is substantial testimony which, if believed, would warrant conviction, a motion by defendant for a directed verdict will be overruled;<sup>57</sup> but, in the absence of such testimony, to the exclusion of every hypothesis but that of guilt, the court should direct a verdict in favor of accused.<sup>58</sup> A request for leave to present a motion for a directed verdict in the absence of the jury is addressed to the discretion of the court,<sup>59</sup> and, where no abuse of the discretion occurs, a denial of such motion is not error.<sup>60</sup>

Instructions. Where, taking into account the entire charge, the instructions distinctly and fairly submit to the jury the question of fact to be determined by them,<sup>61</sup> and are not misleading<sup>62</sup> or prejudicial to accused,<sup>63</sup> and correctly state the law,<sup>64</sup> they are not subject to exception. A charge sufficiently submitting to the jury the issue of good faith of accused in issuing a prescription for a narcotic to a supposed patient is proper,<sup>65</sup> as is an instruction that tells the jury that the prohibited drugs must be prescribed by a physician in the course of his professional practice only.<sup>66</sup>

Charge that moral purpose of statute to prevent use of narcotics would be defeated if physicians could dispense them irrespective of good faith, although statute was primarily one for revenue, was held not error, or at least not prejudicial, but inadvisable.—Du Vall v. It has been held proper, under appropriate circumstances, to instruct a jury that the conduct of government agents in effecting a sale was not dishonorable and was in the performance of their duty.<sup>67</sup> Where the defense relies on, and there is evidence tending to show, entrapment, accused is entitled to an instruction on the law applicable thereto.<sup>68</sup> Instructions to the effect that an incidental purpose of the act was to prevent sales being made to addicts,<sup>69</sup> and to discourage trade in the narcotics mentioned in the act,<sup>70</sup> have been held proper. An instruction requested by accused which ignores indispensable conditions of the defense relied on by him should be refused.<sup>71</sup> Failure of the court to define a word so generally used and so well understood as the word "sale" has been held not error.<sup>72</sup>

Invasion of province of jury. It is an invasion of the province of the jury for the court to state to the jury that they are justified in believing a fact, which, if believed, necessarily leads to a verdict of guilty;<sup>73</sup> but, where the court in its charge assumes the existence as a fact of that which, following the evidence, it would be impossible for it rationally not to assume, the charge is not objectionable.<sup>74</sup>

(5) Sentence and Punishment

Sentence or punishment may be imposed on a convicted offender in accordance with the terms of the act and the counts on which he has been convicted.

Sentence or punishment may be imposed on a convicted offender in accordance with the terms of the act.<sup>75</sup> Where separate and distinct offenses are set forth in separate counts of an indictment, on a plea of guilty to all counts, accused may be sentenced on each,<sup>76</sup> the sentence to run concurrently.<sup>77</sup> The language of the statute is not to be construed as imposing a single punishment for a violation of the distinct requirements of the sections dealing with unstamped packages and written orders when accomplished by one and the same sale;<sup>78</sup> each offense is subject to the penalty prescribed.<sup>79</sup> The penalties provided for in the original act have been held applicable to the amendments thereto.<sup>80</sup>

§ 12. — Manufacture of Smoking Opium

- a. In general
- b. Criminal prosecutions

a. In General

Under the federal statutes, the manufacture of smoking opium by persons other than United States citizens is subject to such restrictions by way of taxation and otherwise as to be virtually prohibited.

The federal statutes impose an internal revenue tax on opium manufacture in the United States for smoking purposes, and require the filing of such bond with the collector of internal revenue as may by regulation be prescribed;<sup>81</sup> and such statutes are constitutional, although they prohibit such manufacture only by persons other than citizens of the United States,<sup>82</sup> and although the tax is so high as to amount to a prohibition of such manufacture.<sup>83</sup>

The purpose of the original act pertaining to the manufacture of smoking opium was to regulate such manufacture,<sup>84</sup> and it applied to any process by which crude opium was converted into a product fit for smoking.<sup>85</sup> On the other hand, "manufacture of smoking opium" within the meaning of the original statute was held to contemplate only a process by which crude opium was converted into smoking opium,<sup>86</sup> and the mere mixing of smoking opium with the residue of opium which has been smoked and then put through a purifying process was not the manufacture of smoking opium under that act.<sup>87</sup>

The purpose of the act, as amended, it has been said, is to prohibit the manufacture of smoking opium,<sup>88</sup> and the act, as amended, prohibits the preparation of opium suitable for smoking purposes from the residue of smoked, or partially smoked, opium.<sup>89</sup> The mixing of water with an extract of opium fit for smoking for the purpose of making it less thick and strong has been held not to be within the prohibition of the act.<sup>90</sup> The statute being a taxing act,<sup>91</sup> its prohibition is not more extensive than its taxing clause;<sup>92</sup> hence, if the article manufactured is not taxable thereunder, there is no violation of the act in its production.<sup>93</sup>

Since the act prohibits merely the manufacture of smoking opium by aliens, it is not an offense for an alien who engages in such manufacture to fail to give the bond required by the act and the regulations thereunder of those who may legally engage therein;<sup>94</sup> hence an accused, shown at the trial to be an alien, cannot be lawfully convicted on such a charge.<sup>95</sup> In the absence of a showing of properly adopted regulations, as required under the act, there can be no conviction on a charge of manufacturing smoking opium without giving the bond specified by law;<sup>96</sup> nor can there be a conviction for a failure to stamp the opium in such a permanent manner as to denote the payment of the internal revenue tax thereon, in the absence of proof that such a stamp existed, or that the proper official with the approval of the secretary of the treasury had by regulation required any stamps for such purpose.<sup>97</sup>

Prosecutions under the federal act dealing with the manufacture of smoking opium are governed by the usual rules applicable in criminal cases, as for example, with respect to the indictment and the admissibility, or the weight and sufficiency, of evidence.

Prosecutions under the act are governed by the rules applicable in criminal prosecutions generally, as, for example, with respect to the sufficiency of the indictment to charge the essential elements of the offense denounced by the statute,<sup>98</sup> and the admissibility<sup>99</sup> or the weight and sufficiency<sup>1</sup> of the evidence.

Sentence and punishment. One who, on conviction of a violation of the statute, receives the minimum sentence prescribed by the statute cannot raise the objection that a sentence exceeding the minimum would be invalid because the statute imposes no maximum, and, hence, leaves the extent of the punishment entirely to the discretion of the court, thus permitting the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments in violation of the constitution.<sup>2</sup> The punishment fixed by the act being for each and every violation of the sections thereof, it has been held that there can be only one penalty for the violation of a section, although it should be violated by the same act in different ways.<sup>3</sup>

§ 13. — Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act

- b. Indictment
- c. Evidence
- d. Trial, sentence, and punishment

a. In General

Under the narcotic drugs import and export act it is an offense knowingly to receive, conceal, buy, or sell opium, or to facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of opium, which has been unlawfully imported.

Under the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act, frequently referred to as the Jones-Miller Act, it is an offense to receive, conceal, buy, sell, or to facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of any narcotic drug after importation, other than as excepted in the statute, defendant knowing it to be imported contrary to law.<sup>4</sup> The act is constitutional<sup>5</sup> and not an invasion of the police power of the states.<sup>6</sup> Its aim is to stamp out the existence of narcotics in this country except for legitimate medical purposes.<sup>7</sup> The act was held not repealed by the Harrison Narcotic Act which expressly disclaims such purpose.<sup>8</sup> It has been held that possession of the prescribed narcotic does not give exclusive federal jurisdiction,<sup>9</sup> and, where the possession comes from a source having no apparent connection with any direct importation, the case may well be dealt with under a state statute.<sup>10</sup>

Unlawful importation<sup>11</sup> and knowledge thereof<sup>12</sup> are essential elements of the offense. However, it is not necessary, in order to constitute unlawful importation, that the narcotic be actually landed, or carried across the customs lines,<sup>13</sup> the offense being committed when the narcotic is brought into the territorial limits of the United States.<sup>14</sup> Neither system nor intent is an essential element of the offense of unlawfully concealing narcotic drugs which have been imported contrary to law.<sup>15</sup>

Possession of the narcotic is not a requisite of the offense of facilitating the transportation thereof or of the offense of facilitating the concealment thereof.<sup>16</sup> In this connection the term "facilitate"

should be given its common and ordinary definition, namely, to make easy or less difficult; to free from difficulty or impediment;<sup>17</sup> and anything done to make a continuance of the transportation of the narcotic less difficult will constitute facilitation of its transportation.<sup>18</sup> Accordingly, where a trunk containing the narcotic is landed for customs inspection, facilitation of transportation may take place within the prohibition of the statute notwithstanding the trunk is not actually moved except by customs officers.<sup>19</sup>

b. Indictment

The indictment in a prosecution for violation of the narcotic drugs import and export act should contain allegations sufficient to set forth the offense and should be direct and certain as to the particular circumstances of the crime.

As in charging statutory offenses generally, the indictment should contain all the essential allegations requisite to constitute the offense,<sup>20</sup> and should be direct and certain as to the particular circumstances of the crime charged.<sup>21</sup> Unlawful importation, being a necessary element of the crime, must be alleged.<sup>22</sup> In a prosecution for facilitating the sale of unlawfully imported narcotics, an allegation that the importation was not under any regulation prescribed by the control board may be treated as surplusage.<sup>23</sup> A count under the act may properly be joined with a count charging a violation of the Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act,<sup>24</sup> and in such case each count charges a separate and distinct offense.<sup>25</sup>

Bill of particulars. The grant or refusal of a bill of particulars in a prosecution for violation of the narcotic drugs import and export act rests in the sound discretion of the court.<sup>26</sup> A bill of particulars is properly refused where the indictment is sufficiently certain to enable accused to prepare his defense and to plead jeopardy should he again be indicted.<sup>27</sup>

Issues, proof, and variance. In general, under a count charging that defendant knowingly and unlawfully received and concealed a narcotic which had been unlawfully imported, the proof should be sufficient to show that the narcotic was concealed by accused, that it had been unlawfully imported, and that accused knew that it had been unlawfully imported;<sup>28</sup> and, under a count charging that defendant knowingly and unlawfully facilitated the transportation of a narcotic which had been imported unlawfully, the proof should show that accused had facilitated the transportation of the narcotic, that it had been unlawfully imported, and that accused knew that it had been unlawfully imported.<sup>29</sup> A variance between the indictment and the proof as to the amount of the drug is not necessarily fatal.<sup>30</sup>

c. Evidence

- (1) Presumptions and burden of proof
- (2) Admissibility and weight or sufficiency

(1) Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In a prosecution under the narcotic drugs import and export act, although the government has the burden of proving the accused's guilt, it is aided by the statutory presumption, arising from unexplained possession and concealment of any of the specified drugs, that they were unlawfully imported and that the accused had knowledge thereof.

As in other criminal cases, the burden of proof is on the government, and every element of the offense must be proved by evidence sufficient to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.<sup>31</sup> However, while the burden of proving guilt never shifts from the government,<sup>32</sup> it is aided in carrying this burden by certain presumptions arising under the provisions of the act,<sup>33</sup> such as the presumption that opium or smoking opium found in the country was unlawfully imported,<sup>34</sup> and the presumption, arising from unexplained possession and concealment of any of the drugs within the provisions of the act, of unlawful importation<sup>35</sup> and knowledge of such unlawful importation by accused.<sup>36</sup> As has been stated, possession of the narcotic drug in the absence of a satisfactory explanation by defendant creates, without more, an inference of guilt,<sup>37</sup> so that there is cast on the person found in possession of a narcotic drug the burden of showing that it came into his possession lawfully.<sup>38</sup> The provi-

49 C.J. p 1070 note 7.

Necessity of trial and proof of possession

The presumption arising from unexplained possession does not obtain until defendant is placed on trial and proof is made by the government of the possession of the drug by defendant.—U. S. v. Tom Yu, D. C. Ariz., 1 F.Supp. 357.

36. U.S.—U. S. v. Feinberg, C.C.A. Ill., 123 F.2d 425, certiorari denied Feinberg v. U. S., 69 S.Ct. 626, 315 U.S. 801, 86 L.Ed. 1201—U. S. v. Moe Liss, C.C.A.N.Y., 105 F.2d 144 —Frank v. U. S., C.C.A.Mo., 37 F. 2d 77.

37. U.S.—Hood v. U. S., C.C.A.Okl., 78 F.2d 150.

Prima facie evidence of guilt

The fact that defendant was carrying narcotics furnished prima facie evidence of guilt in prosecution for willfully facilitating the transportation of narcotics.—U. S. v. Li Fat Tong, C.C.A.N.Y., 152 F.2d 850.

38. U.S.—U. S. v. Li Fat Tong, supra—Howard v. U. S., C.C.A.Ill., 75 F.2d 562, certiorari denied 55 S. Ct. 654, 295 U.S. 740, 79 L.Ed. 1687.

sions of the act creating presumptions from the fact of possession have been held to apply to the narcotics mentioned in the act regardless of whether their importation is restricted or absolutely barred.<sup>39</sup> Where un rebutted, such a presumption, when it arises, is sufficient to sustain a conviction.<sup>40</sup>

The statutory provisions creating presumptions growing out of possession merely establish a rule of evidence, not substantive law creating offenses,<sup>41</sup> and are constitutional.<sup>42</sup> They do not violate the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution as requiring accused to take the stand, or as destroying the presumption of innocence,<sup>43</sup> or as requiring defendant to be a witness against himself.<sup>44</sup> Such provisions of the act do not constitute a denial of due process of law.<sup>45</sup> The provision that possession of the narcotic shall be deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless defendant explains the possession to the satisfaction of the jury is not unconstitutional as authorizing the jury to adjudge its satisfaction of the explanation on its own whim or reason without any standard of measurement.<sup>46</sup> Provisions of this nature, however, are penal and in contravention of common-law principles, and, hence, must be strictly construed.<sup>47</sup>

The presumptions created by the act are rebuttable,<sup>48</sup> and a defendant found in possession of a narcotic may overcome the inferences of unlawful importation and knowledge thereof by satisfactory proof that in his case possession of narcotics did not involve a violation of the statute, either because the narcotics were not imported contrary to law or because he had no knowledge of unlawful importation.<sup>49</sup> While the burden of overcoming the statutory presumptions is on accused,<sup>50</sup> there is no burden on him to establish that the drug was lawfully brought into the United States;<sup>51</sup> he is only called on to explain his possession of the drug to the satisfaction of the jury,<sup>52</sup> although in this connection defendant's explanation of his possession of the narcotic must not only be believed by the jury but must also be one that shows a possession which is lawful under the statute.<sup>53</sup>

Character or purpose of possession. Possession of any sort is sufficient to raise the presumption and place on accused the burden of explaining the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.<sup>54</sup> Possession for use, for example, does not differ in legal effect from possession for any other illegitimate purpose, such as for sale or distribution.<sup>55</sup>

(2) Admissibility and Weight or Sufficiency

General rules have been applied in prosecutions under the narcotic drugs import and export act as to the admissibility of evidence and the weight and sufficiency thereof; and, under the statute, possession of a prohibited narcotic, unless satisfactorily explained, is sufficient evidence to authorize conviction.

General rules have been applied in prosecutions under the act as to the admissibility of the evidence,<sup>56</sup> and the weight and sufficiency thereof to sustain a conviction.<sup>57</sup> By virtue of the statutes, possession of a prohibited narcotic is deemed sufficient evidence to authorize conviction unless defendant satisfactorily explains such possession,<sup>58</sup> and, hence, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation of possession, proof of importation is unnecessary.<sup>59</sup>

d. Trial, Sentence, and Punishment

The trial of a prosecution for violation of the narcotic drugs import and export act is governed by the usual rules, as for example, with respect to such matters as the province of the court and jury and the propriety of the instructions. Sentence may be imposed in accordance with the terms of the act.

In a trial on an indictment for a violation of the act, the usual rules prevail as to the province of the court and the jury.<sup>60</sup> It is for the jury to determine whether accused has satisfactorily explained his possession of illegally imported opium.<sup>61</sup> A motion to direct a verdict in favor of defendant is properly denied where there is sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury.<sup>62</sup>

Instructions. The general rules governing instructions in criminal prosecutions apply.<sup>63</sup> It is error for the court to instruct the jury that there is no evidence to rebut the presumption of defendant's knowledge of unlawful importation where defendant has expressly testified that he had no such knowledge.<sup>64</sup> Where the instructions fairly and correctly state to the jury the general rules of law pertinent on a particular defense interposed by accused, he cannot complain of a refusal of the court to give a requested instruction on the subject.<sup>65</sup> A requested instruction is properly refused where it embraces an incomplete and inadequate statement of the law<sup>66</sup> or where it is not correct as applied to the testimony in the case.<sup>67</sup>

Sentence and punishment. Where, on conviction on an indictment containing two counts, a sentence

POKER. Defined see Gaming § 1 a (3).

POLACK. A Pole; a Polander.<sup>1</sup>

POLARISCOPE. The word "polariscope" is derived from the Greek words "polos," a pole, and "skopeo," to view.<sup>3</sup> It is an optical instrument for exhibiting or measuring the polarization of light, or for examining substances in polarized light;<sup>4</sup> an instrument of science used in laboratories.<sup>5</sup> Many forms of the instrument have been contrived,<sup>6</sup> and it is composed of many parts which vary in details of structure so that its operation requires special knowledge and experience.<sup>7</sup> One of the uses of the instrument is to test sugar for tariff purposes, and regulations dealing with such tests are treated in Customs Duties § 36.

POLARIZATION. See Electricity § 1 c.

POLAR STAR RULE. The name given to the rule, generally referred to as the cardinal rule for construction of written documents, that the intent of the maker of a written document, as gathered from its four corners, shall prevail unless such intent antagonizes a statute or is against public policy.<sup>8</sup>

The application of this rule to particular instruments is treated in various titles throughout this work, particular reference being made to Bills and Notes § 42, Contracts § 295, Deeds § 83, Insurance § 291, and to the C.J.S. title Wills § 590, also 69 C.J. p 52 note 26—p 59 note 43.

Also, one of that Slavic people, or their descendants, who founded Poland.<sup>12</sup>

"Pole," as a linear measurement, is defined in the C.J.S. title Weights and Measures § 1, also 49 C. J. p 1070 note 13.

POLICE. In legal usage the word "police" is not a term of indefinite meaning,<sup>13</sup> although it has three significations.<sup>14</sup> The first relates to the measures which are adopted to keep order, the laws and ordinances on cleanliness, health, the markets, etc.; the

Historical note

"Poland is recognized by all of the reliable historians and geographers as a distinct part of Europe. Through its many vicissitudes that country and its people have maintained a distinct individuality with distinct race, tastes, ideals and aspirations. . . . No people of modern times have clung with greater tenacity and devotion to their national and racial traditions and aspirations in the face of political and economic oppression than the Poles. Their history goes back to the tenth century, and in the seventeenth century they stood in the first rank among the powers of the world."—Koninski v. Vieser, supra.

Term officially recognized

The Russian government, on Aug. 14, 1914, issued a proclamation addressed to the "Poles," duly signed by Nicholas, commander and chief and general adjutant of all the armies of Russia.—Koninski v. Vieser, 161 N.Y.S. 129, 131, 97 Misc. 259.

13. Miss.—Monet v. Jones, 18 Miss. 237, 243.

In colloquial speech "police" is ordinarily understood as applying only to the uniformed constabulary, but that is only one of its meanings.—Norris v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 192 A. 531, 543, 172 Md. 667.

14. Md.—Corpus Juris cited in Norris v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 192 A. 531, 540, 172 Md. 667.

second has for its object to procure to the authorities the means of detecting even the smallest attempts to commit crime, in order that the guilty may be arrested before their plans are carried into execution and delivered to the justice of the country; the third comprehends the laws, ordinances, and other measures which require the citizens to exercise their rights in a particular form.<sup>15</sup>

Blackstone and Cooley have treated the meaning of the word "police,"<sup>16</sup> and Jeremy Bentham wrote that "Police is in general a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crime or calamities."<sup>17</sup> Later legal writers have stated that "police" has also been divided into "administrative police," which has for its object to maintain constantly public order in every part of the general administration, and "judiciary police," which is intended principally to prevent crimes by punishing criminals.<sup>18</sup>

The word "police" is variously defined as meaning policy, civil organization, the regulation, discipline, and control of a community; civil administration; enforcement of law; public order;<sup>19</sup> that species of superintendence by magistrates which has principally for its object the maintenance of public tranquillity among its citizens;<sup>20</sup> the internal regulations and government of a kingdom or state;<sup>21</sup> the government of a city or town;<sup>22</sup> the administration of the laws and regulations of a city or incorporated town or borough.<sup>23</sup> In a more restricted sense it is the department of government which is concerned with maintenance of order and enforcement of law;<sup>24</sup> and the term is particularly applied to those officers who are appointed for the purpose of the maintenance of public tranquillity among the citizens.<sup>25</sup>

As a verb, "police" means to watch, guard, or maintain order in.<sup>26</sup>

The term "police" is treated in various places throughout the title Municipal Corporations, reference being made to the index to that title. The powers of county police officers are discussed in Counties § 137. The powers, duties and functions of state police or rangers are treated in the C.J.S. title States § 66, also 59 C.J. p 122 note 17—p 123 note 25.

16. Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations wrote that the police of a state, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its whole system of internal regulation, by which the state seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the state, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizens with citizens those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own so far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others.

It is difficult to define the scope of the term. It has been the subject police power to protect the health, lives, and morals of the people.<sup>28</sup> In its broader acceptance it embraces everything to promote the general welfare; everything essential to the great public needs.<sup>29</sup> In the plural, such provisions of law as are designed to protect the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of citizens and to secure them in the enjoyment of their property;<sup>30</sup> regulations adopted in the exercise of "police power."<sup>31</sup>

Police regulations are discussed in various connections throughout this work, particular reference being made to Carriers § 188, Constitutional Law § 98, and District of Columbia §§ 3-5. Consult also the Descriptive-Word Index.

Other phrases employing the word are set out in the note.<sup>32</sup>

POLICIA. In Spanish law, the science or art of government.<sup>33</sup>

POLICITACION. In Spanish law, a promise or offer.<sup>34</sup>

POLICY. The word "policy" is defined as meaning a settled or definite course or method adopted by a government,<sup>35</sup> institution, body, or individual.<sup>36</sup>

As applied to a rule of law, "policy" refers to its probable effect, tendency, or object, considered with respect to the social or political well-being of a state.<sup>37</sup>

The word is employed as the name of a game or form of gambling, and is treated in this connection in Gaming § 1 b (3), and as constituting a lottery in Lotteries § 10. The word "policy" is defined in Insurance § 1. For other references consult the index to this title sub verbo "Contract or policy."

Policy of the Law

The term is difficult to define.<sup>38</sup> It has been considered to refer to the purpose and spirit of the substantive laws of a state, whether such laws be found in the constitution and statutes or in judicial records.<sup>39</sup> The term has been said to be synonyof much discussion by the courts and its application has sometimes been sarcastically criticized as the use of an indefinable something to sustain legislation unsupportable on any other ground.—In re O'Neill, supra.

Public Policy

The term "public policy" is perhaps the most expansive and widely comprehensive phrase known to the law.<sup>41</sup> It has been said that the doctrine of public policy originated in England in the early part of the Fifteenth Century,<sup>42</sup> and that the principle of public policy owes its existence to the very sources from which the common law is supplied.<sup>43</sup> The phrase is used in several senses, and it may mean the common law or general statutory law of the state, and it may mean the prevalent notions of justice and general fundamental conceptions of right and wrong, and it may mean both.<sup>44</sup> It is a vague, indefinite, and nebulous term,<sup>45</sup> and the decisions under this branch of the law are in such confusion as to have provoked the remark by Burroughs, J., in Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229,<sup>46</sup> which is set out infra p 218 note 36. It is a term of broad significance,<sup>47</sup> although the decisions of some courts have given it a limited legal meaning.<sup>48</sup> It is a relative term,<sup>49</sup> sometimes used in a very vague, loose, or inaccurate sense,<sup>50</sup> and it must be interpreted in the light of the circumstances surrounding the particular transaction.<sup>51</sup>

Being of such vague and uncertain meaning,<sup>52</sup> and of such variable quantity,<sup>53</sup> the term "public

42. Origin of public policy doctrine
"Public policies in general are those considerations of public interest and morality which the state enforces by legislation or judicial action. The earliest trace of this principle in the English Law Reports is found in a case decided in the reign of Henry the Fifth in 1414, when a dyer had contracted not to use his art within a certain town for a certain time, and the court went upon the principle that it was not good for the realm; that it was against public policy for men to bind themselves not to exercise their trades. The principle of public policy has never been repudiated and its application has varied with changing conditions and public opinion."—In re Andrus' Will, 281 N.Y.S. 831, 846, 156 Misc. 263.

which is best for the common good of the community; and in that sense there may be every variety of opinion, according to the education, habits, talents and dispositions of each person, who is to decide whether an act is against public policy or not. policy" has frequently been said not to be susceptible of exact or precise definition.<sup>54</sup> Mr. Chief Justice Story, in his work on Conflict of Laws, writing on the doctrine of public policy states, "Public policy is in its nature so uncertain and fluctuating, varying with the habits and fashions of the day, with the growth of commerce and the usages of trade, that it is difficult to determine its limits with any degree of exactness. "Public policy" is also defined as the public good;<sup>68</sup> the public interest;<sup>69</sup> the manifest will of the state,<sup>70</sup> which must and does vary with habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public.<sup>71</sup> In a narrower sense,<sup>72</sup> public policy is the principles under which freedom of contract or private dealing is restricted by law for the good of the community.<sup>73</sup> Another statement, sometimes referred to as a definition,<sup>74</sup> is that whatever contravenes good morals or any established interests of society is against public policy.<sup>75</sup> Thus, anything which tends clearly to injure public health, the public morals, the public confidence in the purity of the administration of the law, or to undermine that sense of security for individual rights, whether of personal liberty or of private property, which any citizen ought to feel, is against public policy;<sup>76</sup> or, stated conversely, whatever is not forbidden by statute or contrary to judicial decision, or against the public health, morals, safety, or welfare, or the like, is not against public policy.<sup>77</sup>

In a judicial sense, public policy does not mean simply sound policy, or good policy, but it means the policy of a state established for the public weal either by law, by courts, or by general consent.<sup>78</sup> In the administration of law by a court, public policy is essentially different from what may be public policy in the view of a legislative body.<sup>79</sup>

Where a legislative body is concerned, the term "public policy" is employed in a less technical sense,<sup>80</sup> and may be and often is nothing more than expediency,<sup>81</sup> political expediency,<sup>82</sup> or the policy on which governmental affairs are conducted for the time being;<sup>83</sup> public sentiment.<sup>84</sup> With the courts public policy must, and may only, be a reliance on consistency with sound policy and good morals as to the consideration or thing to be done,<sup>85</sup> although notions of expediency and justice, which at times are called "public policy," may exercise a controlling influence in the development of the law.<sup>86</sup>

It has been said that in this country difficulty and confusion have resulted because of the failure of the courts uniformly to determine the sources of public policy.<sup>87</sup> In a general way the public policy of a state is its attitude toward certain acts, transactions, and practices, as declared in the constitution and statutes, and in the common law found in the opinions of the court of last resort.<sup>88</sup> A somewhat similar statement has been made to the effect that the public policy of a state is established either by the constitution and laws of the state or by the judicial decisions of the courts of the state or by general consent, and general consent is usually manifested by the constitution and laws of the state or by the judicial decisions of the courts of the state.<sup>89</sup> When public policy is found in the constitutions, statutes, or ordinances it is referred to as "written public policy," and when it is declared by judicial decision or by public opinion it is referred to as "unwritten public policy."<sup>90</sup>

Primarily it is for the lawmakers to determine the public policy of the state,<sup>91</sup> for the public policy of a state is a law of the state,<sup>92</sup> and is a legislative and not a judicial function,<sup>93</sup> and it is not the function of the judiciary to declare what is the public policy of the state respecting matters on which the legislature has spoken<sup>94</sup> or to create or announce a public policy of its own.<sup>95</sup>

"The right of a court to declare what is or is not in accord with public policy does not extend to specific economic or social problems which are controversial in nature and capable of solution only as the result of a study of various factors and conditions. It is only when a given policy is so obviously for or against public health, safety, morals or welfare that there is a virtual unanimity of opinion in regard to it, that a court may constitute itself the voice of the community in so declaring. There must be a positive, well-defined, universal public sentiment, deeply integrated in the customs and beliefs of the people and in their conviction of what is just and right and in the interests of the public weal. Familiar illustrations are those involving unreasonable restraints of marriage or of trade, exclusive arrangements for obtaining

Fundamental public policy is declared in the constitutions,<sup>96</sup> and, when a constitution declares and defines certain public policies, such public policies must be paramount,<sup>97</sup> although statutes conflict and judicial decisions be to the contrary.<sup>98</sup> If public policy is not declared by constitution it is to be looked for in legislative enactments,<sup>99</sup> and, when the legislature speaks on a particular subject over which it has constitutional power to legislate, its utterance is the public policy of the state,<sup>1</sup> and such utterances are conclusive<sup>2</sup> unless they contravene some constitutional provision,<sup>3</sup> and the courts are required to give effect to such policy.<sup>4</sup> When the public policy of the state on any particular subject is established by legislative enactment it is not unalterable, but may change with changing legislation,<sup>5</sup> but, if a change in that policy is desired, application must be made to the legislature, and not to divorces, suppression of bids for public contracts, interference with freedom of conscience or religion. If, in the domain of economic and social controversies, a court were, under the guise of the application of the doctrine of public policy, in effect to enact provisions which it might consider expedient and desirable, such action would be nothing short of judicial legislation, and each such court would be creating positive laws according to the particular views and idiosyncrasies of its members. Only in the clearest cases, therefore, may a court make an alleged public policy the basis of judicial decision."—Mamlin v. Genoe, 17 A.2d 407, 409, 340 Pa. 320.

Subsequent enactments

Any action which by legislation, or in the absence of legislation thereon, by the decisions of the court, has been held contrary to the public policy of the state is no long-

the judiciary.<sup>6</sup>

There are innumerable subjects not specifically treated either by constitution or by statute, and as to these the public policy of the state is declared by the court of last resort.<sup>7</sup> That is, in the absence of any declaration of public policy on a particular subject in the constitutions and statutes, it may be determined from judicial decisions,<sup>8</sup> the function of the judiciary in this connection being solely to determine and declare what is the public policy of the state or nation as such policy is found expressed in the constitution, statutes, and judicial decisions of the state or nation.<sup>9</sup>

The statement is frequently made that the term "public policy" means the law of the state as found declared in its constitution, its statutory enactments, and its judicial records,<sup>10</sup> and there is uniform agreement that the public policy of a state or nation is declared by the constitution and by the legislative acts, and, where these two sources are silent, by the declarations of the courts.<sup>11</sup> Although some cases go even further and recognize that when er contrary to the public policy when such action is expressly authorized by subsequent legislative enactments.—Albers v. Lamson, supra.

Proper instances for judicial declaration

Generally speaking, the legislature is the body to declare the public policy of a state and to ordain changes therein. This is peculiarly so where a matter of expediency is up for consideration. In many cases, on questions of good morals, as opposed to mere expediency, the courts may declare and apply the public policy of the state; again, where an alteration in public policy on any point of general interest has actually taken place, and is indicated by long-continued change of conduct on the part of the people affected, when such a change has become practically universal, the courts may recognize this fact and declare the governing public policy accordingly.—Mamlin v. Genoe, 17 A.2d 407, 409, 340 Pa. 320—Commonwealth v. Hall, 140 A. 626, 630, 631, 291 Pa. 341, 58 A.L.R. 1023.

public policy cannot be determined from the constitution, the statutes, and the decisions of the courts, recourse may be had to the constant practice of government officials,<sup>12</sup> sometimes referred to as administrative practices,<sup>13</sup> in the much-cited case of Hartford Fire Insurance Company v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company<sup>14</sup> is expressed what is known as the "limited rule,"<sup>15</sup> which is as follows: The public policy of a state or nation must be determined by its constitution, laws, and judicial decisions,<sup>16</sup> not by the varying opinions of laymen, lawyers, or judges as to the demands of the interests of the public;<sup>17</sup> that is, that resort will not be had to sources of information other than the constitution, the statutes, and legislative enactments.<sup>18</sup> In this connection the statement has frequently been made that for the purposes of juridical application it may be regarded as settled that a state has no public policy, properly cognizable by the courts, which is not derived or derivable by clear implication from the established law of the state, as found in the constitution, statutes, and judicial decisions;<sup>19</sup> and some judicial tribunals even more cautiously hold that a state can have no public policy except that to be found in the statutory laws and constitution.<sup>20</sup>

The question, what is the public policy of a state, and what is contrary to it, if inquired into beyond these limits, will be found to be one of great vagueness and uncertainty, and to involve discussions which scarcely come within the range of judicial duty and functions, and upon which men may and will complexly differ."—*Cross v. While it has been said that the "limited rule" is supported by the weight of authority,<sup>21</sup> the rule has also been criticized,<sup>22</sup> and much broader rules have been announced,<sup>23</sup> and the United States supreme court has broadened the rule that was laid down in the Hartford Fire Insurance Company case,<sup>24</sup> and, with other courts, will consider the constitution, laws, judicial decisions, and as well the applicable principles of the common law.<sup>25</sup> In many jurisdictions it is recognized that public policy may be established by general consent as well as by law or the courts,<sup>26</sup> and a number of courts have stated that public policy is sometimes declared by constitution, sometimes by statutes, and sometimes by judicial decision; but more often it abides only in the customs and conventions of the people, in their clear consciousness and conviction of what is naturally and inherently just and right between man and man, and, when a course of conduct is cruel or shocking to the average man's conception of justice, such course of conduct must be held to be obviously contrary to public policy, although such policy has never been so written in the bond, whether it be constitution, statute, or decree of court.<sup>27</sup> In stating what is perhaps the broadest rule it has been said that it is unwise to attempt to limit the sources which may be consulted to determine whether a policy has become so fixed in the community mind or conscience that it may be regarded as the public policy of the state.<sup>28</sup>

One source determinative of the public policy of the state is the federal Constitution,<sup>29</sup> but there are many matters of state policy over which the United States supreme court has no jurisdiction,<sup>30</sup> and as to these matters each state has the right to declare

Criticism expressed

"It has frequently been said that such public policy is a composite of constitutional provisions, statutes and judicial decisions, and some courts have gone so far as to hold that it is limited to these. The obvious fallacy of such a conclusion is quite apparent from the most superficial examination. When a contract is contrary to some provision of the constitution, we say it is prohibited by the constitution, not by public policy. When a contract is contrary to a statute, we say it is prohibited by a statute, not by a public policy. When a contract is contrary to a settled line of judicial decisions, we say it is prohibited by the law of the land, but we do not say it is contrary to public policy. Public policy is the cornerstone—the foundation of all constitutions, statutes and judicial decisions; and its latitude and longitude, its height and its depth, greater than any or all of them. If this be not true, whence came the first judicial decision on matter of public policy? There was no precedent for it, else it would not have been the first."

Public policy of New Jersey

(1) "Perhaps the best statement as to the sources of information for the determination of public policy in New Jersey is to be found in Bigelow v. Old Dominion Copper, etc., Company, 1908, 74 N.J.Eq. 457, 71 A. 153, 174. As stated by Chancellor Pitney: '... the public policy of New Jersey is not occult or mysterious, nor are its sources far to seek. Subject to the federal Constitution and a written Constitution of our own, the people of this state have adopted in the main the common law and equity system of England, and this obtains here subject to modification by the Legislature. Add to these that New Jersey expects all persons and corporations to observe the law or abide by the consequences, and we have the public policy of New Jersey in a nutshell.'"Girard Trust Co. v. Schmitz, 20 A.2d 21, 29, 129 N.J.Eq. 444.

(2) "The sources determinative of public policy are, among others, our federal and state constitutions, our public statutes, our judicial decisions, the applicable principles of the common law, the acknowledged prevailing concepts of the federal and state governments relating to and affecting the safety, health, morals, and general welfare of the people for whom government—with us—is factually established."—Allen v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co., 37 A.2d 37, 39, 131 N.J.Law 475.

the public policy in another.<sup>40</sup> However, it has also been said that public policy is variable only in so far as the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public have become varied and complex, and the principles to be applied have always remained unchanged and unchangeable.<sup>41</sup>

While the statement has been made that public policy is to a great extent a matter of individual opinion, because what one man or judge might think against public policy another might think altogether excellent public policy,<sup>42</sup> this statement is subject to the qualification that the courts must always endeavor to apply to the facts of a particular case a general rule of law which they find expressed in statute or judicial decision or which they formulate to meet new conditions; and, even in formulating a rule, individual notion of public policy may be given effect only where the court finds that its notion of public policy is so generally held and so obviously sound that it is in fact a part of the law of the state.<sup>43</sup> Therefore, manifestly what is the public policy of a state and what is contrary to it is not to be measured by the private convictions or notions of the persons who happen to be exercising judicial functions.<sup>44</sup>

When a statute declares a public policy in respect of a matter, it applies to all citizens of the state alike,<sup>45</sup> and is applicable to all portions of the state,<sup>46</sup> and it prohibits each and every citizen from acting contrary to the declaration of the statute.<sup>47</sup>

Public policy is a question of law, and not a question of fact,<sup>48</sup> and is evidenced by the expression of the will of the legislature contained in statutory enactments;<sup>49</sup> but, before a court is warranted in invoking the principle of public policy, it must be firmly and solemnly convinced that an existent public policy is clearly revealed.<sup>50</sup> The courts have pointed out the limitations both of judicial declaration of public policy and of the application of the theory, and have made it clear that the theory of public policy embodies a doctrine of vague and variable quality and, unless deducible in the given circumstances from constitutional or statutory provisions, should be accepted as the basis of a judicial determination, if at all, only with the utmost circumspection.<sup>51</sup> There are no fixed rules by which to determine what acts are repugnant to public policy;<sup>52</sup> but it is well established that no phase of private relations shall be contrary to public policy,<sup>53</sup> although the courts will not characterize a transaction as invalid because it is contrary to public policy unless the transaction contravenes some positive statute or some well-established rule of law.<sup>54</sup> It is regarded as a sound principle that a rule of law, not statutory, will not be grounded or based on public policy when the enforcement thereof will not accomplish any public good, and its non-enforcement will not result in any public injury.<sup>55</sup>

It has been suggested that public policy is a principle of judicial legislation or interpretation founded on the current needs of the community,<sup>56</sup> and the term implies ascertainment of public needs and a declaration of law in view of the public interest affected,<sup>57</sup> but in exercising their legitimate functions the courts do no more than declare the existence of a policy revealed to them by a process of interpretation, and this they do to safeguard that which the community wants, and not what an ideal community ought to want.<sup>58</sup>

Public policy is a course of social behavior whereby the rational adherence to the moral code is required of all who receive, or assert a claim to, the protection of the sovereignty,<sup>59</sup> and therefore only those claims which are consonant with the purpose and spirit of the law can be within public policy.<sup>60</sup> It frequently is designated the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law,<sup>61</sup> and it is considered to be a rule of law representing the policy of the law in relation to its administration.<sup>62</sup>

Public policy has its basis in the promotion of the public good,<sup>63</sup> the basic principle of the doctrine being the good of the whole people,<sup>64</sup> and it means the interest of persons other than the parties,<sup>65</sup> and therefore that interest may not be set at naught by the acts or conduct of any party alone.<sup>66</sup>

Public policy regards the primary principles of equity and justice,<sup>67</sup> is always in accord with the purpose and spirit of the law,<sup>68</sup> and is sometimes expressed under the title of social and industrial justice, as it is conceived by our body politic.<sup>69</sup> The statement has been made that back of every law there is something which is conventionally referred to as public policy,<sup>70</sup> and public policy is regarded as the inarticulate background of the penal law.<sup>71</sup>

Public policy exists and functions generally within a state for the protection and regulation of matters of public morals, public health, public safety, public welfare, and similar and related subjects, and condemns that which conflicts with the morals of the time and contravenes any established interest of society.<sup>72</sup> It has reference to the general principles by which public affairs are conducted,<sup>73</sup> and, as applied to a rule of law, it refers to statutes which have for their purpose the regulation of personal conduct and relations in the interest of the public welfare.<sup>74</sup> In substance it may be said to be the community common sense and common conscience extended and applied throughout the state to matters of public morals, public health, public safety, public welfare, and the like, being that general and well-settled public opinion relating to man's plain palpable duty to his fellow man, having due regard to all the circumstances of each particular relation and situation.<sup>75</sup> It operates as a ban against gambling or wagering contracts, contracts involving wrongful acts or omissions, contracts which tend to injure the public service, contracts injuriously affecting the administration of justice, contracts in restraint of trade, and numerous other intolerable practices and undertakings of like nature, and it tends to produce, and is reflected in, constitutional provisions, enactments of statutes, and judicial pronouncements which would render illegal or unenforceable acts and conduct inimical to the welfare of the public.<sup>76</sup>

"Public policy" has been said to be synonymous with "policy of the law" see supra p 209 note 40, and "public order" see 67 C.J.S. p 521 note 73, and is practically synonymous with "public good" see 38 C.J.S. p 936 note 12.1.

It has been distinguished from "comity" see Conflict of Laws § 3 b (2)..

The doctrine of public policy is frequently applied to contractual undertakings, and in this connection the term is defined in Contracts § 211. Agreements contrary to public policy because of interference with the administration of government in general are treated in Contracts §§ 212-222, and agreements contrary to public policy because of interference with the course of justice in Contracts §§ 223-232. Agreements affecting marital relations and therefore contrary to public policy are discussed in Contracts §§ 233-237, and agreements which are in restraint of trade and therefore contrary to public policy in Contracts §§ 238-258. Various other agreements which are contrary to public policy are discussed in Contracts §§ 259-271.

The doctrine of public policy is not restricted in its application to contractual relations. Public policy disapproves the total exclusion of property from social commerce for long periods of time, and for that reason general restraints on the alienation of property are contrary to public policy, as stated in Property § 13. Testamentary limitations on the alienation of property, as well as other testamentary conditions and restrictions to which the doctrine of public policy is applicable are treated in the C.J.S. title Wills §§ 979-991, also 69 C.J. p 660 note 41-p 672 note 4. Trust conditions and restrictions of the same nature are discussed in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 78, also 65 C.J. p 333 note 50. See also Perpetuities § 2.

The term "public policy" is defined in Conflict of Laws § 4 e (4) in connection with the well-established principle that foreign law or rights based thereon will not be given effect or enforced if opposed to the settled public policy of the forum.

In addition to its application to agreements affecting the marital relation as previously stated, the doctrine of public policy is also applied to other incidents of the domestic relationship. Marriage is fostered and protected by public policy, as stated in Marriage § 1 b, and public policy requires that the marriage should be surrounded with every safeguard, and its severance allowed only in the manner and for the causes specified by law, as stated in Divorce § 8. For other particular applications of the doctrine to the domestic relationship see the indexes to the titles Adoption of Children, Divorce, Husband and Wife, Marriage, and Parent and Child.

Applications of the doctrine of public policy are to be found not only in almost every title in this work, but frequently to a variety of situations within a single title. By way of illustration, the stare decisis rule and the law of the case rule are both founded on public policy, as stated in Courts §§ 187, 195. In general, insurance contracts as a class are upheld on the grounds of public policy, as stated in Insurance § 239, and the "war clause" or "military service clause" under which the company stipulates for a reduction of liability or exemption from liability altogether in case the insured dies while engaged in military or naval service in time of war is not considered to be contrary to public policy, as stated in Insurance § 241 b. However, the doctrine of public policy is applied to render void and

POLITICAL. A word of broad meaning,<sup>79</sup> said to have many shades of meaning.<sup>80</sup> In its higher and true sense "political" means that which pertains to the government of a nation.<sup>81</sup> So used, "political" is defined to mean belonging to the science of government; treating of polity or politics; as political theories;<sup>82</sup> of or pertaining to the conduct of government;<sup>83</sup> of or pertaining to, or incidental to the exercise of, functions vested in those charged with the conduct of the government;<sup>84</sup> pertaining to policy or the administration of government;<sup>85</sup> relating to the management of affairs of state.<sup>86</sup>

"Political" is also defined to mean having or conforming to, a polity, or settled system of administration, as a political body or government;<sup>87</sup> having an organized system of government, administering a polity, as a fully developed political community.<sup>88</sup>

In a generic sense, "political" means of or pertaining to the exercise of the rights and privileges or the influence by which individuals of a state seek to determine or control its public policy; having to do with the organization or action of individuals, parties, or interests which seek to control the appointment or action of those who manage the affairs of a state.<sup>89</sup>

The term "political" in its broadest sense includes the entire system of laws, constitutional and statutory, of a government,<sup>90</sup> and should not be narrowed so as to be exclusively applied to groups and parties advocating political views or policies.<sup>91</sup>

In its ordinary meaning the term is not limited to something pertaining merely to the actual management of a government by individuals for the time holding office thereunder, but the essential significance in proper and ordinary use of the word includes anything pertaining to the establishment of a form of government.<sup>92</sup>

Political power. The policy of government or its administration.<sup>93</sup> It may be exercised either in the formation or administration of government or both,

Political subdivision. The term is broad and comprehensive and denotes any division of a state made by the proper authorities thereof, acting within their constitutional powers, for the purpose of carrying out those functions of the state which by long usage and inherent necessities of government have always been regarded as public;<sup>97</sup> a division of a parent entity for some governmental purpose.<sup>98</sup> The term may be used in more than one sense, and it may designate a true governmental subdivision such as a county, township, etc., or it may have a broader meaning, denoting any subdivision of the state created for a public purpose although authorized to exercise a portion of the sovereign power of the state only to a limited degree.<sup>99</sup>

Broadly speaking, a political subdivision of a state is a subdivision thereof to which has been delegated certain functions of local government.<sup>1</sup>

POOL. As a noun the word "pool" is defined as meaning a small body of standing or stagnant water, and in this sense is treated in the C.J.S. title Waters § 2.

"Pool" as a game is defined in Gaming § 1 b (3); with relation to bets or wagers the word is defined in § 1 c (2). In this sense various related terms, "auction pool," "combination pool," "pool seller," "pool selling," "french pool," "pool table," and "pool ticket" are also defined in Gaming § 1.

The term is also employed to denote a combination of persons contributing money to be used for increasing or depressing the market price of commodities as discussed in Monopolies § 1. The word "pool" also means a surrender of certain individual rights and powers to the common holder for the benefit of all, on the theory that accruing benefits gained by joint venture outweigh the individual rights surrendered.<sup>36</sup>

As a verb, "pool" is defined as meaning to contribute to a common fund on the basis of a mutual division of profits or losses, or to make a common interest.<sup>37</sup>

POOLING. An aggregation of property or capital belonging to different persons, with a view to common liabilities and profits.<sup>39</sup>

POOLROOM. A room where the game of pool is played.<sup>40</sup> By usage the term has been held to be synonymous with "pool hall."<sup>41</sup> The term is defined as a place where people resort to bet on races, etc., in Gaming § 1 f.

POOR. The term "poor" is used in two senses.<sup>42</sup> In one sense it is used simply as opposed to the term "rich."<sup>43</sup> Thus ordinary laborers, mechanics, and artisans are spoken of as poor people, without a thought of describing persons who are other than self-supporting.<sup>44</sup> In the other sense, the term is used to describe that class who are entirely destitute and helpless, and therefore dependent on public charity,<sup>45</sup> and it is in this sense that the word is employed in Paupers § 1.

The word "poor" is defined as meaning destitute of property; indigent; needy;<sup>46</sup> wanting in material resources or goods.<sup>47</sup> As used in charitable bequests the term "poor" is discussed in Charities § 42 b.

The word "poor" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "destitute" see 26 C.J.S. p 1245 note 99, "indigent" see 42 C.J.S. p 1363 note 16, "necessitous" see 65 C.J.S. p 270 note 74.1, and "pauper" see Paupers § 1.

Rural population

(1) The phrase is understood to signify a people scattered over the country and engaged in agricultural pursuits or some similar avocation requiring a considerable area of territory for its support.—State v. Eld-

distinguished from the rest, as the German population of New York.<sup>53</sup>

The classification of counties according to population is treated in Counties § 4, and the classification of cities in Municipal Corporations § 36. The population of a particular district for official purposes is treated in Census § 6.

POPULIST. A member of the people's party.<sup>54</sup>

POPULUS. As the first word of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1083 notes 10, 11.

POBCELAIN. A highly finished translucent kind of pottery, usually glazed.<sup>55</sup> It has been distinguished from "earthenware" see 28 C.J.S. p 615 note 46.1.

PORCH. The word "porch" is used in a variety of senses, differing somewhat in different localities in this country.<sup>56</sup> It may be applied to a shelter in front of a door, and it may be used as a generic term to include a shelter with closed sides as well as one with pillars.<sup>57</sup> Thus, the forms that a porch may take are various;<sup>58</sup> it may be an open appendage attached to the inclosed part of the building;<sup>59</sup> it may be inclosed save for the doorway, and it may be open to the outside on three sides, with its outer corners supported by columns or piers, and it may extend above by more than one story.<sup>60</sup> It may be large enough to serve as a covered walk.<sup>61</sup>

Practically all of the definitions indicate that a porch is a particular kind of entrance,<sup>62</sup> and, when the word is employed by architects in its technical sense, it denotes an entrance or open vestibule in connection with a doorway.<sup>63</sup> Whatever may have been the meaning of the word "porch" in ancient times, it is said that in modern architecture it is always a part of a building;<sup>64</sup> an integral part of a house;<sup>65</sup> but from the standpoint of building line restrictions a porch is something apart from the main body of the house, as discussed in Municipal Corporations § 1705.

Many good definitions of the word "porch" have been given,<sup>66</sup> and it has been defined as meaning an entranceway or vestibule;<sup>67</sup> an open passageway;<sup>68</sup> a portico;<sup>69</sup> a terrace;<sup>70</sup> a veranda;<sup>71</sup> a covered entrance to a building;<sup>72</sup> It has also been defined to be a covered place of entrance to a building and differentiated from its principal mass;<sup>73</sup> a covered way or entrance, whether inclosed or uninclosed;<sup>74</sup> an exterior appendage to a building, forming a covered approach or vestibule to a doorway.<sup>75</sup>

"Porch" is embraced in the definition of "portico,"<sup>76</sup> and has been held a broad enough term to embrace such structures as a marquee,<sup>77</sup> a sleeping porch,<sup>78</sup> and a sun porch;<sup>79</sup> but it does not embrace

a porte-cochere<sup>80</sup> or a flight of steps from the street to the second story of a building.<sup>81</sup>

"Porch" and "portico" have been held to be synonymous,<sup>82</sup> and the terms have also been distinguished.<sup>83</sup>

"Porch" as used in deeds with respect to building restrictions is discussed in Deeds § 164.

PORCION. A Spanish word which, as applied to land, is not a technical term, and means no more than portion or parcel in English.<sup>84</sup>

POREIN. As a Greek word meaning to give or beget see Parent 67 C.J.S. p 624 note 8.

PORK. The flesh of swine, fresh, or salted, used for food.<sup>85</sup>

POERNOGRAPHIC. Of or pertaining to obscene literature; obscene; licentious.<sup>86</sup>

PORT. The word "port" is somewhat indefinite, and its meaning is not exact, but depends on the connection in which it is used.<sup>87</sup> The term is used in two senses, and in popular understanding it denotes a particular place, but in a larger acceptation a "port" comprises under one name a district of many places classed together for the purposes of revenue.<sup>88</sup> The word "port" is variously defined as meaning an artificial or natural harbor or haven;<sup>89</sup> a harbor<sup>90</sup> or shelter<sup>91</sup> to vessels from a storm;<sup>92</sup> a sheltered inlet, cove, bay, or recess, into which vessels can enter and in which they can lie in safety from storm;<sup>93</sup> the waters within the gate, or door, or outlet toward the sea.<sup>94</sup> Also, a commercial point to which vessels resort;<sup>95</sup> a place intended for loading or unloading goods;<sup>96</sup> a place where ships are accustomed to load and unload goods, or to take on and let off passengers, and where persons and merchandise are allowed to pass into and out of the realm;<sup>97</sup> a place either on the sea coast or on a river, where ships stop for the purpose of loading and unloading, from whence they depart and where they finish their voyages;<sup>98</sup> the place where port authorities are exercising jurisdiction.<sup>99</sup>

A port, in common sea phrase, may be said to be any safe station for ships;<sup>1</sup> but in legal usage a port is a place for arriving and lading and unlading of ships in a manner prescribed by law, and near to which is a city or town for the accommodation of marines and the securing and vending of their merchandise;<sup>2</sup> a place where persons and merchandise are allowed to pass into and out of the realm and at which customs officers are stationed for the purpose of inspecting or appraising imported goods.<sup>3</sup> In this sense a port may exist on the frontier, where the foreign communication is by land.<sup>4</sup>

In the commercial sense and by the most ancient definitions, a port is an inclosed place where vessels laide and unload goods for export or import.<sup>5</sup>

As used in policies of marine insurance, the term "port" may embrace any place where it is customary to load or unload vessels see Insurance § 312 d.

"Port" has been held to be synonymous with "district" see 27 C.J.S. p 366 note 90.2, and has been compared with, or distinguished from, "high seas" see 39 C.J.S. p 899 note 18.1, and "place" see 70 C.J.S. p 1094 note 59. "Port" and "harbor" have been held to be synonymous, and the terms have also been distinguished see 39 C.J.S. p 774 notes 54, 55.

Phrases employing the word "port" are set out in the note,<sup>6</sup> and for additional phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 49 C.J. p 1086 notes 78-98.

PORTABLE. Capable of being borne or carried; easily transported;<sup>7</sup> movable.<sup>8</sup>

"Portable" has been distinguished from "stationary."<sup>9</sup>

PORTE-COCHERE. A term, derived from "porte" (gate) and cochiere from "coche" (coach), borrowed from the French.<sup>10</sup> It is a large gateway allowing vehicles to drive into a courtyard.<sup>11</sup> Sometimes in the United States it is applied erroneously to a covered carriageway, or carriage porch.<sup>12</sup> In this sense it may or may not be inclosed by gates or doors, the inclosed porte-cochere being well-known in this country.<sup>13</sup> However, in the United States, it is not used exclusively to signify a carriage porch.<sup>14</sup>

PORTER. The term "porter" literally means a doorkeeper or one who is in charge of a door or a gate;<sup>15</sup> but in the development of the language it has come to have a broader meaning and may designate an attendant in a sleeping car or parlör car who makes up the berths and waits on the passengers,<sup>16</sup> or it may refer to one who carries burdens or luggage for hire, as at hotels or railway stations.<sup>17</sup>

The word "porter" is also the name of a variety of beer as stated in Intoxicating Liquors § 13.

PORTFOLIO. A portable case for keeping, usually without folding, loose papers, prints, drawings, or the like; such a case used for documents of state; hence the office and functions of a minister of state or member of cabinet; as to receive the portfolio of war.<sup>18</sup>

It has been held synonymous with "position."<sup>19</sup>

PORTICO. A word usually applied to a shelter in front of a door, although formerly in its classic sense, and possibly still in close discrimination, suggesting length and a roof supported by pillars.<sup>20</sup> It is defined as meaning a veranda.<sup>21</sup> The term has been held to include such structures as a marquee see 55 C.J.S. p 802 note 50, and porch see ante p 227 note 76. "Portico" and "porch" have been held to be synonymous, and the terms have also been distinguished see ante p 228 notes 82, 83.

The term may be employed as referring to a legacy,<sup>30</sup> a widow's award<sup>31</sup> or distributive share,<sup>32</sup> or that part of a parent's estate, or of the estate of one standing in the place of a parent, which is given to a child.<sup>33</sup>

When applied to property acquired from one's ancestor, the word is the most comprehensive which can be used, broad enough to include, and intended to cover, all the property or estate thus received.<sup>34</sup>

"Portion" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "block" see 11 C.J.S. p 364 note 59, "lot" see 54 C.J.S. p 841 note 47, "part" see 67 C.J.S. p 878 note 36, and "share."<sup>35</sup>

POSITIVELY. Certainly; without doubt.<sup>67</sup>

"Positively" has been compared with "actually" see 1 C.J.S. p 1445 note 42.

POSITO; POSITUS. As the first words of maxims as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1090 notes 40, 41.

POSSE. A force with legal authority; a detachment; an armed band.<sup>68</sup> The word "posse" also means possibility,<sup>69</sup> being chiefly used in this sense in the phrase "in posse" which is discussed in 42 C.J. S. p 491 note 31.

POSSESS. According to its etymology, the word "possess" means to sit upon.<sup>70</sup> It is variously defined as meaning to have and to hold;<sup>71</sup> to have actual control, care, and management of;<sup>72</sup> and not a passing control, fleeting and shadowy in nature;<sup>73</sup> to enjoy in person;<sup>74</sup> to occupy in person;<sup>75</sup> to have a just right to;<sup>76</sup> to be master of.<sup>77</sup>

The term "possess," used in connection with property, is defined in Property § 14; and in connection with statutes relating to unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors is defined in Intoxicating Liquors § 222 b.

"Possess" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "control," see 18 C.J.S. p 33 note 68.1, "hold," see 40 C.J.S. p 407 note 62, "occupy," see 67 C.J.S. p 83 note 36, and "own," see 67 C.J.S. p 548 note 75. It is substantially synonymous with "kept" see 51 C.J.S. p 427 note 61.

Possessing. The present participle of the verb "possess."<sup>78</sup>

Possessed. A variable term, having different meanings depending on the circumstances in which it is used.<sup>79</sup> It may imply no more than a corporeal having,<sup>80</sup> and it is defined as meaning held by lawful title.<sup>81</sup> There is nothing in the word "possessed" which imports legal title as distinct from beneficial ownership;<sup>82</sup> and it sometimes implies no more than that one has a property in a thing; that he has it as owner; that it is his.<sup>83</sup> In this sense it may be used even though an intruder may have excluded the owner for the time being.<sup>84</sup> It is only in its technical or strictly legal sense that it can be limited to mean only actual physical possession, or the right of immediate actual possession.<sup>85</sup>

POSSESSIO. In the civil law that condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others.<sup>86</sup>

Maxims. "Possessio" as the first word of maxims

POSSESSION. It has been said that in common speech and in legal terminology no term is more ambiguous than the word "possession,"<sup>87</sup> whether considered in its relation to real property or personal property, and this is especially true when it occurs in statutory provisions.<sup>88</sup> The term has a variety of meanings,<sup>89</sup> and disassociated from the context of a writing, and unexplained by surrounding circumstances, it is susceptible of different meanings,<sup>90</sup> and may mean several things, or combinations of them.<sup>91</sup> It is interchangeably used to describe actual possession and constructive possession,<sup>92</sup> which often so shade into one another that it is difficult to say where one ends and the other begins.<sup>93</sup>

Possession expresses the closest relation of fact which can exist between a corporeal thing and the person who possesses it, implying an actual physical contact, as by sitting or standing upon a thing;<sup>94</sup>

denoting custody coupled with a right or interest of proprietorship;<sup>95</sup> and "possession" is inclusive of "custody," although "custody" is not tantamount to "possession."<sup>96</sup> In its full significance, "possession" connotes domination or supremacy of authority.<sup>97</sup> It implies a right and a fact; the right to enjoy annexed to the right of property, and the fact of the real detention of a thing which would be in the hands of a master or of another for him.<sup>98</sup> It also implies a right to deal with property at pleasure and to exclude other persons from meddling with it.<sup>99</sup> Possession involves power of control and intent to control,<sup>1</sup> and all the definitions contained in recognized law dictionaries indicate that the element of custody and control is involved in the term "possession."<sup>2</sup>

While it has been said that the word "possession" is capable of no exact definition,<sup>3</sup> and that efforts of courts and jurists to fix its meaning with some definiteness and certainty have availed little to clarify its ambiguity,<sup>4</sup> it nevertheless has a variety of definitions and interpretations.<sup>5</sup> It is variously defined as meaning the act<sup>6</sup> or state<sup>7</sup> of possessing;

possessing, or holding as one's own;<sup>8</sup> ownership, whether rightful or wrongful;<sup>9</sup> owning or having thing in one's power.<sup>10</sup>

It is further defined as meaning custody and control;<sup>11</sup> actual care, control, and management;<sup>12</sup> actual control by physical occupation;<sup>13</sup> the present right and power to control a thing;<sup>14</sup> the detention and control of the manual or ideal custody of anything which may be the subject of property, for one's use or enjoyment, either as owner or as the proprietor of a qualified right in it, and either held personally or by another who exercises it in one's place and name;<sup>15</sup> the detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself or by another who keeps or exercises it in his name;<sup>16</sup> that condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all other persons.<sup>17</sup>

In law, the term is defined as meaning an act, fact, or condition of a person having such control of property that he may legally enjoy it to the exclusion of others having no better right than himself;<sup>18</sup> the physical control of a thing which belongs of right to unqualified ownership in such a manner as to exclude control by other persons.<sup>19</sup>

The word "possession" is also defined as meaning the thing possessed;<sup>20</sup> that which anyone occupies, owns, or controls;<sup>21</sup> and in this sense, as applied to the thing possessed, the word is frequently employed in the plural,<sup>22</sup> denoting property in the aggregate; wealth;<sup>23</sup> and it may include real

Possession is such control of property that the person having it may legally enjoy it to the exclusion of others, and it means that which one occupies or controls.—Shell v. State, 42 S.W.2d 19, 20, 184 Ark. 248.

It is also defined as meaning dominion; as, foreign possessions;<sup>25</sup> and, while in this sense the term is not a word of art descriptive of a recognized geographical or governmental entity, it is employed in a number of federal statutes to describe the area to which various congressional statutes apply.<sup>26</sup>

The use of the word "possession" with qualifying adjectives is common in the law,<sup>27</sup> and possession may be actual<sup>28</sup> or constructive.<sup>29</sup> Possession may also be adverse, see Adverse Possession § 1 et seq, animo domini,<sup>30</sup> by relation of law,<sup>31</sup> civil, see Property § 14, contested,<sup>32</sup> continuous, see Adverse Possession § 125 b, corporeal, see 20 C.J.S. p 235 notes 8, 9, derivative, see 26 C.J.S. p 981 note 48, disputed,<sup>33</sup> distinct or exclusive, see Adverse Possession §§ 47-52, effective, see 28 C.J.S. p 839 note 13, hostile, see Adverse Possession §§ 53-124, in fact,<sup>34</sup> in law,<sup>35</sup> innocent, see 43 C.J.S. p 1204 note 10, lawful, see Adverse Possession § 21, legal, see 52 C.J.S. p 1044 note 15, mixed, see Adverse Possession § 193, naked, see 64 C.J.S. p 1083 note 6, natural,<sup>36</sup> open, notorious, and visible, see Adverse Possession §§ 41-46, peaceable, see Adverse Possession § 140 b, scrambling,<sup>37</sup> substantial,<sup>38</sup> true,<sup>39</sup> under color of title,<sup>40</sup> and virtual.<sup>41</sup>

"Possession" has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "care" see 12 C.J.S. p 1144 note 6, and "seizin" see Property § 14.

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "access" see 1 C.J.S. p 412 note 77, "care" see 12 C.J.S. p 1144 note 9, "conceal" see 15 C.J.S. p 793 note 73, "custody" and "custody of property" see 25 C.J.S. p 70 notes 95, 2, "dependency" see 26 C.J.S. p 719 note 8, "detention" see 26 C.J.S. p 1256 note 15, "occupancy" and "occupation" see the C.J.S. title Property § 14, "receiving and concealing" see 15 C.J.S. p 794 note 7, and "seizin" see Property § 14.

"Possession" in the sense of ownership, and as a degree of title, and as indicating the holding or retaining of property in one's power or control, is treated in Property § 14.

What constitutes "possession" within the meaning of statutes relating to the unlawful possession of intoxicants is treated in Intoxicating Liquors § 222 b. "Possession" as an element of the offense of receiving stolen goods is discussed in the C.J.S. title Receiving Stolen Goods § 6, also 53 C.J. p 505 note 38-p 506 note 52. ### § 1. Definition, Nature, and Purpose

The proceeding by possessory warrant is a summary remedy given by statute for the recovery of a personal chattel which has been taken by fraud, violence, enticement, or seduction from the possession of the party complaining, or which, having been in his recent possession, has disappeared and is believed to be in the possession of the party complained against.

The proceeding by possessory warrant is a summary remedy given by the Georgia code for the recovery of a personal chattel<sup>1</sup> which has been taken by fraud, violence, enticement, or seduction from the possession of the party complaining,<sup>2</sup> or which, having been in his recent possession, has disappeared and is believed to be in the possession of the party complained against.<sup>3</sup> The proceeding is summary, harsh, and in derogation of the common law,<sup>4</sup> and quasi-criminal in its nature.<sup>5</sup> The purpose of the proceeding is to protect and quiet the possession of personalty,<sup>6</sup> but only as against acts which are inhibited by statute, as discussed infra § 4.

A possessory warrant is not the proper remedy to recover possession of property where the title<sup>7</sup> or right to possession<sup>8</sup> is in dispute. Bail trover is the appropriate remedy to try these issues, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Replevin § 344 et seq, also 65 C.J. p 158 note 30 et seq, and in Georgia trover is a statutory remedy in which plaintiff may recover damages or the property itself, as considered in the C.J.S. title Replevin § 377, also 65 C.J. p 172 note 73 et seq.

§ 2. Construction of Statutes

Statute authorizing possessory warrants should be strictly construed.

Since the proceeding is summary, harsh, and in derogation of the common law, as discussed supra § 1, the statute authorizing it should be strictly construed;<sup>9</sup> and especially so, since the proceeding un-

§ 3. Persons by and against Whom Remedy Available

- a. Persons in whose favor remedy available
- b. Persons against whom remedy available

a. Persons in Whose Favor Remedy Available

One who had actual possession of the property at the time or shortly before the defendant's taking or receiving possession in violation of the statute may recover possession by possessory warrant.

One who had actual possession of the property at the time or shortly before defendant's taking or receiving possession in violation of the statute may recover possession by possessory warrant.<sup>11</sup> Thus, a consignee of goods cannot recover them from a carrier by possessory warrant in the absence of a bill of lading, it appearing under these circumstances that he never had actual or constructive possession of the goods,<sup>12</sup> and the president of a corporation cannot maintain a possessory warrant in his own name to recover possession of the corporate property of which he has had no prior possession either as an officer or an individual.<sup>13</sup>

Landlords. In addition to the ordinary cases in which a possessory warrant will issue a landlord has the right to repossess crops by possessory warrant in all cases where the cropper unlawfully sells or otherwise disposes of any part of a crop, or excludes the landlord from possession thereof, while the title thereto remains in the landlord, as discussed in Landlord and Tenant §§ 816, 822. A landlord is entitled to recover by possessory warrant under this special section, without showing a compliance with the requirements of the general section,<sup>14</sup> but not in the absence of evidence of acts by the cropper in violation of the landlord section.<sup>15</sup>

Persons jointly interested. Where two persons are jointly interested in personal property, either legally or equitably, and one of them delivers the possession of it to a third person, the other cannot recover possession of it by possessory warrant sued out by himself alone.<sup>16</sup> A possessory warrant cannot be brought as between those jointly interested with respect to a share of the joint property, until there has been a division into shares and an assignment to the owners separately.<sup>17</sup> If, however, by the terms of partnership, one partner must have and has had the exclusive possession of certain personalty, in order to carry out the objects of the partnership, the warrant will, at his instance, lie against his copartner who has deprived him of possession by fraud.<sup>18</sup>

Principals. The possession of property by an agent is in law the possession of his principal, and suffices to support a proceeding by possessory warrant whenever the former, after demand, has refused to deliver the property to the latter,<sup>19</sup> or whenever there has been a wrongful taking from the agent's possession by a third person.<sup>20</sup> A father who has placed personal property in the possession of his son to use or manage may recover it by possessory warrant from his son who has converted it to his own use,<sup>21</sup> or from a third person to whom the son has transferred it.<sup>22</sup> A father may recover by possessory warrant a chattel taken from his minor son who was in possession of it by his father's permission.<sup>23</sup>

Tenants. A warrant will lie at the instance of a tenant who has been deprived of his lawfully acquired, quiet, and peaceable possession of property by the landlord, although title is in the latter.<sup>24</sup> Also a tenant who has been wrongfully deprived of the rented premises by his landlord may recover by possessory warrant the "domestic fixtures" which

Where a partnership, succeeding to all of the assets of corporation, demanded of bailees of corporation return of personalty loaned by cor-

b. Persons against Whom Remedy Available

A possessory warrant will lie against anyone who has unlawfully taken or received possession of personal property in the modes detailed in the statute.

A possessory warrant will lie against anyone who has unlawfully taken or received possession of personal property in the modes detailed in the statute.<sup>26</sup> Thus the warrant will lie against a principal who has the power, custody, and control of the chattel, even though it is in the actual possession of the agent.<sup>27</sup>

Public officers. Public officers who, in the discharge of their official duties, take possession of property under a valid statute are not amenable to a proceeding by possessory warrant,<sup>28</sup> although a warrant may issue where the officer's act is under an invalid statute.<sup>29</sup>

Purchasers at judicial sales. The warrant will not lie against the purchaser at a judicial sale made under the forms prescribed by law, on the ground that the trespass was committed by a levying officer in taking possession of the property, since the purchaser did not participate in the tort.<sup>30</sup>

§ 4. Grounds .

A possessory warrant lies only where it is shown that the defendant acquired possession of the property in dispute in one of the modes prescribed by the statute.

A possessory warrant lies only where it is shown that defendant acquired possession of the property in dispute in one of the modes prescribed by the statute.<sup>31</sup> Since the statute is strictly construed, as discussed supra § 2, unless it clearly appears that possession was acquired by defendant in one of the modes inhibited by the statute, there is nothing for the other proceedings to rest on.<sup>32</sup>

Fraud. If one obtains the possession alone by fraud, a possessory warrant will lie against him at the instance of the person injured,<sup>33</sup> but it will not lie where the title is obtained by fraud and the possession accompanies it by the consent of the owner.<sup>34</sup> Even where the defrauded party withdraws his consent and tenders back what he received in the exchange, the continued possession is not the statutory possession on which the issue of the warrant is authorized.<sup>35</sup>

Force or duress. The warrant lies whenever personal property has been taken from the possession of the complaining party by force or violence.<sup>36</sup> So, too, the warrant lies when a husband under duress of threats to prosecute him criminally delivers to a third person property belonging to his wife without her consent,<sup>37</sup> and the fact that the wife subsequently, under duress of threats to prosecute her husband, assented to the retention of possession, will not affect her right to invoke the remedy.<sup>38</sup>

Enticement. Where a personal chattel is taken by enticement from the possession of another, a possessory warrant lies at the instance of the injured party to recover possession thereof.<sup>39</sup>

Consent. Where possession of the property was obtained by none of the means inhibited by the statute, but by consent, express or implied, a posses-

Assignment by defendant

(2) Owner could not by possessory warrant recover animal impounded when it strayed on impounder's land, regardless of whether animal had committed actual damage.—Weatherby v. Gentry, supra.

with law and his possession changes to a wrongful and tortious act.—Goodwill v. Peoples, 53 S.E. 1115, 2 Ga.App. 673.

sory warrant will not lie.<sup>40</sup> However, where consent is limited to a particular time after which the property shall be returned on demand, a continued possession after demand is ground for issuing the warrant.<sup>41</sup> Possession lawfully acquired but subsequently changed to a wrongful tortious and fraudulent one is a proper case for a possessory warrant.<sup>42</sup>

Possession received without legal authority. The warrant lies whenever property in the recent peaceable and lawfully acquired possession of one person has disappeared without his knowledge and consent, and has been received into the possession of another without lawful authority.<sup>43</sup>

§ 5. Property Subject to Warrant

The remedy is invocable to quiet the possession of all kinds of personal property of which the holder had the immediate possession and use.

The remedy is invocable to quiet the possession of all kinds of personal property of which the holder had the immediate possession and use,<sup>44</sup> of concealed property as well as where it is held openly.<sup>45</sup> It does not issue for the recovery of immature crops still a part of the land,<sup>46</sup> or of shrubbery and flowers attached to the realty.<sup>47</sup>

§ 6. Procedure in General

Prior possession in the plaintiff is a condition precedent to the right to maintain the proceeding, and possession of the property in the defendant at the time the warrant is issued is necessary. Since the proceeding is summary and special, statutory requirements as to procedure must be followed.

Prior possession in plaintiff is a condition precedent to the right to maintain the proceeding.<sup>48</sup> In some cases, the prior possession of defendant may be in law the prior possession of plaintiff sufficient to support a proceeding by possessory warrant.<sup>49</sup> Where recovery is sought on the ground of taking

by fraud, violence, or enticement, it is not necessary to show plaintiff's prior possession within any limit of time preceding the issuing out of the warrant, provided defendant does not show four years' uninterrupted possession.<sup>50</sup> It is only where defendant does show four years' uninterrupted possession that plaintiff's right to recover is lost under the statute.<sup>51</sup>

Defendant's possession. Possession of the property in defendant at the time the warrant is issued is necessary,<sup>52</sup> although personal physical possession is not necessary if it is shown that the property is in his power, custody, or control, or in the possession of some agent or custodian holding it for defendant or in collusion with him.<sup>53</sup> Where defendant's possession, originally lawful, subsequently becomes unlawful, the property may be recovered by possessory warrant, even though the case is not within the words of the statute.<sup>54</sup>

Jurisdiction. Since the proceeding is summary and special, as discussed supra § 1, the jurisdiction must clearly appear on the face of the papers.<sup>55</sup> Where a possessory warrant is sued out before a magistrate having jurisdiction, the magistrate making the order alone has power to enforce the execution of it.<sup>56</sup>

Venue. Possessory warrant may be had in the county where the property in dispute is found,<sup>57</sup> and the statutory requirement in this respect is presumably satisfied by bringing the proceedings in the county where defendant is found.<sup>58</sup>

Affidavit for warrant. The affidavit is the foundation of the proceeding.<sup>59</sup> It is not necessary that it should be sworn to before the judge issuing the warrant; it may be sworn to before anyone having power to administer the oath.<sup>60</sup> The affidavit required by the statute must be made by the injured party,<sup>61</sup> his agent or attorney in fact or at law.<sup>62</sup>

If made by one in a representative capacity, it must clearly appear that it is made in behalf of the party represented, if that is the fact,<sup>63</sup> or else it will be taken as the affidavit of affiant individually.<sup>64</sup>

In deciding what averments will suffice, regard must be had to the general scope and scheme of the statute, and to what, in the nature of things, is practicable or impracticable, in applying it to the actual cases which it is intended to reach,<sup>65</sup> as, for example, the allegation of defendant's residence in a certain county, to give jurisdiction where the statute places it in the county where the property is found,<sup>66</sup> or the description of the property for purposes of identification.<sup>67</sup> Where proceedings are brought under the special section relating to landlords and croppers, it is not necessary that the affidavit should contain allegations required in proceedings under the general sections.<sup>68</sup> An affidavit and a possessory warrant is amendable to the same extent and with the same consequences as in the case of ordinary declarations.<sup>69</sup>

Execution of warrant. Under the statutory provisions for execution and return of the warrant, authorizing the officer having the warrant to arrest defendant and seize the property, it has been held that a superior court has no jurisdiction by mandamus to enforce the order of the inferior court to imprison defendant on failure to produce the property, the inferior court which issued the warrant having sole power to execute its own orders.<sup>70</sup> An order of an inferior court in a habeas corpus proceeding discharging a defendant in a suit for possessory warrant from jail, to which he had been committed for failure to deliver the property to the sheriff, may be reviewed on certiorari, even though there is no statute providing for such procedure, the court having constitutional power to correct errors by writ of certiorari.<sup>71</sup> The officer executing the warrant is declared by statute to be the authorized custodian of the property until final judgment is rendered if there is no certiorari, or until the certiorari is finally disposed of, if one has been properly sanctioned,<sup>72</sup> and it is the duty of the officer to retain custody of it until final hearing and judgment,<sup>73</sup> and he should not be interfered with while he is discharging this duty,<sup>74</sup> unless it is made to appear that he is allowing the property to be removed beyond the jurisdiction of the state, that he is insolvent and has no sufficient bond, or the securities on his bond are insolvent, or other sufficient reason exists for a court of equity to entertain a proceeding quia timet.<sup>75</sup> Where no such reason appears, an injunction will not lie to prevent the officer leaving the property in the possession of defendant.<sup>76</sup>

§ 7. Hearing

On the return of the warrant the magistrate is required to hear the evidence in a summary way. The sole issue to be determined is in whose lawfully acquired, quiet, and peaceable possession the property last was, and the burden is on the plaintiff to support the facts contained in his affidavit by competent and sufficient evidence.

The magistrate, on the return of the warrant, is required by the statute to hear the evidence in a summary way.<sup>77</sup> However, the parties should always be allowed a reasonable opportunity to bring forward their proof.<sup>78</sup> A continuance, however, in order to obtain testimony, is properly refused where such evidence is irrelevant.<sup>79</sup>

Issues. Since the proceeding is not the proper remedy to recover possession of property where the title or right to possession is involved, as discussed supra § 1, the sole issue to be determined on the trial of the proceeding is in whose lawfully acquired, quiet, and peaceable possession the property last was,<sup>80</sup> and whether possession thereof has been obtained from such party in any of the several modes prohibited by the statute.<sup>81</sup> The issue raised

Acquisition of possession
Sole question is as to manner in which defendant acquired possession.

by a possessory warrant does not involve criminal intent,<sup>82</sup> and so a finding for defendant in a search-warrant proceeding establishing lack of criminal intent does not bar a later proceeding by possessory warrant against him.<sup>83</sup>

Evidence. On the hearing the burden rests on plaintiff to support the facts contained in his affidavit by competent and sufficient evidence.<sup>84</sup> He establishes a prima facie case, however, by showing that he was in prior, peaceable possession of the property, and that it later was found in defendant's possession.<sup>85</sup> The burden then shifts to defendant.<sup>86</sup> The burden is also on defendant to establish four years' prior possession, the affirmative defense allowed under the statute, where he sets it up.<sup>87</sup>

The evidence must be confined to the question of possession solely, and any other evidence not pertinent to that issue, exclusively, the magistrate has no right to receive,<sup>88</sup> although evidence tending to show title is admissible for the purpose of identifying the property,<sup>89</sup> and showing prior possession in plaintiff.<sup>90</sup> There have been decisions holding the evidence as to various matters sufficient<sup>91</sup> or insufficient<sup>92</sup> on the hearing on the return of the warrant. Thus, where the undisputed evidence shows that a lienholder of personal property surrendered possession to one who later returned the property to the rightful owner, a judgment in favor of the owner and against the lienholder in proceedings brought by the lienholder is justified by the evidence.<sup>93</sup> Where it appears that plaintiff had never voluntarily parted with possession of her goods and that they were obtained by defendant to secure an indebtedness of plaintiff's husband or father, without her consent and without authority of law, a finding for plaintiff is justified.<sup>94</sup>

Questions of fact. Whether plaintiff has or has not consented is a question of fact which must vary in each particular case, and may, or may not, be inferred, according to the circumstances which may have been proved.<sup>95</sup>

§ 8. Determination

If the magistrate finds from the evidence that possession of the property has been obtained from the plaintiff in any of the modes prohibited by statute, it is his duty to restore possession to the plaintiff, on his giving the bond required by statute, but, if the plaintiff fails to establish such facts, or if the defendant shows quiet and peaceful possession of the property in himself, the warrant should be dismissed.

Generally, no final order disposing of the property should be made by the primary court until after it is produced and placed within the power of the court or its officers.<sup>96</sup> If the return of the warrant shows that the property could not be found, the magistrate hears evidence on the ability of defendant to produce, and, if he decides against defendant on that issue, he may order defendant to be committed to jail until the property shall be produced.<sup>97</sup>

If the magistrate finds from the evidence that possession of the property has been obtained from plaintiff in any of the modes prohibited by the statute, it is his duty to restore possession to plaintiff,<sup>98</sup> on his giving the bond required by statute,<sup>99</sup> which is conditioned to have the property forthcoming to answer in any suit brought by defendant in relation to any lien or claim on it within four years thereafter;<sup>1</sup> or on plaintiff's failure to give such bond to turn over the property to defendant on his giving a like bond.<sup>2</sup> Where the property has been turned over to defendant on plaintiff's failure to give bond, the court cannot later, by parol order and without notice to defendant, retake

the property and give it to plaintiff on his giving bond, even though his failure to give bond in the first instance was excusable.<sup>3</sup> A decree in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, if it conforms to the statutory requirements in other respects, is not invalidated by its containing a warrant for the arrest of a third person who wrongfully took the property from plaintiff and placed it in the possession of defendant.<sup>4</sup>

If plaintiff fails on the hearing to support the facts contained in his affidavit by competent and sufficient evidence, it is the duty of the magistrate to dismiss the proceeding for want of jurisdiction, and leave plaintiff for redress to the ordinary proceedings at law.<sup>5</sup> If defendant satisfactorily shows quiet and peaceable possession of the property in himself,<sup>6</sup> or in himself and those under whom he claims,<sup>7</sup> for four years next immediately preceding the issuance of the warrant, it is the duty of the magistrate to dismiss the proceeding, without any bond to plaintiff for its forthcoming.<sup>8</sup>

Effect of dismissal. When a possessory warrant proceeding is dismissed without a trial on the merits, it is the officer's duty to return the property to the person from whom it was taken under the warrant,<sup>9</sup> but the dismissal will not be regarded as an adjudication of the right of possession in favor of defendant.<sup>10</sup>

Mode of restoring property. The final order, when proper to be made by the primary court, should be for delivery of the property to the officer and then by the officer to the party.<sup>11</sup>

§ 9. — Review by Certiorari

Under a permissive statute certiorari will lie to review the decision of a magistrate in proceedings on a possessory warrant.

Under a permissive statute certiorari will lie to review the decision of a magistrate in proceedings on a possessory warrant,<sup>12</sup> even though rendered out of term,<sup>13</sup> but not the verdict of a jury to which an appeal from the magistrate's order had been taken without authority of law, such proceedings on appeal being a nullity, and there being no law to review by certiorari in such cases.<sup>14</sup> Under an early statute it was held that certiorari to review the decision of the magistrate did not lie, notwithstanding the constitutional provision.<sup>15</sup> Certiorari will not lie on the ground of evidence newly discovered since the trial,<sup>16</sup> or in cases where trover, and not possessory warrant, is the proper remedy.<sup>17</sup>

Proceedings. Certiorari from a decision in a proceeding by possessory warrant must be sued out within the time prescribed by statute,<sup>18</sup> and must be directed against the adverse party in the warrant,<sup>19</sup> as, for example, against the adverse party individually where the warrant is sued out by him individually,<sup>20</sup> and not against the firm of which he is a member.<sup>21</sup> The writ of certiorari must be served on the magistrate who tried the case within the time prescribed by statute unless service is waived,<sup>22</sup> and written notice of the sanction of petition for service, and of the time and place of hearing, is required by the statute to be given to the adverse party, unless such notice is waived in writing.<sup>23</sup>

Under statutory provisions the notice of intention to apply for a writ of certiorari when served on the opposite party operates as a supersedeas for a certain number of days,<sup>24</sup> and the writ of certiorari when granted operates as a supersedeas until the final hearing.<sup>25</sup> Thus it is not error for a superior court judge in sanctioning the petition for certiorari to stay the entire proceedings until the further order of the court.<sup>26</sup> However, if no notice of application is given to the opposite party, and a writ of certiorari is subsequently granted, notice of the granting of the writ must be given to the officer to hold him personally liable for delivery under the order of the magistrate.<sup>27</sup>

The superior court, in hearing a certiorari, has full jurisdiction over all issues of fact,<sup>28</sup> but is restricted to the errors alleged to have been committed by the primary court on the trial.<sup>29</sup>

Determination. Unless the judgment complained of is demanded under the evidence adduced on the hearing,<sup>30</sup> the superior court, may, in its discretion, remand the case and order a new trial or rehearing,<sup>31</sup> or make a final disposition of a proceeding by possessory warrant without sending it back for a new trial,<sup>32</sup> even though the evidence before the magistrate was conflicting on controlling issues;<sup>33</sup> fixing the amount of the bond to be given if the magistrate failed to do so.<sup>34</sup> However, the court has no power to order the delivery of the property in dispute to plaintiff without the bond required by the statute;<sup>35</sup> nor can it make final order requiring one party to a proceeding to deliver the property directly to the other.<sup>36</sup>

All issues under the Possessory Warrant Act are mixed questions of law and fact, and whenever the finding of the primary court is against the principles of equity and justice, a new trial should be ordered.<sup>37</sup> However, the superior court, on certiorari, cannot order a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence since the trial of the proceeding.<sup>38</sup>

Enforcement of judgment of reversal. When the property is, in pursuance of the judgment, turned over to plaintiff, on his giving the bond required by the statute, the judgment is performed, and if certiorari is afterward sued out and judgment reversed, defendant is left to the ordinary remedies, and the court cannot attach plaintiff for contempt in failing to obey its order to redeliver the property which he has sold before reversal and cannot produce.<sup>39</sup>

POSSIBILITAS. As the first word of a maxim as to which there have been no recent applications see 49 C.J. p 1117 note 1.

POSSIBILITY. In a legal sense the word "possibility" means a contingency,<sup>1</sup> an uncertain thing which may happen.<sup>2</sup> However, it is not always to be taken in its absolute or literal sense, but rather as having the practical meaning which the law ordinarily ascribes to such abstract terms.<sup>3</sup>

Failure to serve notice of application

Where certiorari is applied for within time prescribed by law, proceeding is not rendered moot and subject to dismissal merely because petition failed to give notice of intention to certiorari possessory-warrant case, as provided by statute, and did not obtain certiorari until opposite party had given bond for property under statute.—Smith v. Whitaker, supra.

Fact that defendant, after judge of superior court had sanctioned petition for certiorari from order of justice committing defendant to jail for failure to produce property described in possessory warrant, voluntarily executed bond to officer executing warrant, which bond obligated defendant and surety to care for property described in warrant until certiorari was determined and property was called for by officer did not demand finding by superior court judge that issues raised by certiorari were moot.—McCants v. The word "possibility" is sometimes applied to an estate or an interest in property, and in this sense is treated in Estates § 5 and in the C.J.S. title Wills § 85, also 68 C.J. p 498 note 89—p 499 note 98. The assignability of a possibility is treated in Assignments § 12.

POSSIBLE. The word "possible" is derived from the Latin words "potis," meaning able or capable, and "esse," meaning to be.<sup>5</sup> It is defined as meaning capable of being done;<sup>6</sup> capable of being, becoming, or coming to pass;<sup>7</sup> capable of existing or of being conceived or thought of;<sup>8</sup> liable to happen, or to come to pass;<sup>9</sup> that which can or may be done;<sup>10</sup> free to happen or not;<sup>11</sup> not contrary to the nature of things;<sup>12</sup> neither necessitated nor precluded.<sup>13</sup> "Possible" means that something may or may not occur; that may chance; dependent on contingency;<sup>14</sup> and the word is frequently employed to describe a contingency which may but is not likely to occur.<sup>15</sup> The word "possible" is also used at times to intensify the meaning of such words as "might" or "could."<sup>16</sup>

"Possible" has been held to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, "may be" see 57 C.J.S. p 460 note 60, "practicable,"<sup>17</sup> "reasonable,"<sup>18</sup> and "reasonably practicable."<sup>19</sup>

It has been compared with, or distinguished from, "actual" see 1 C.J.S. p 1433 note 51, "impossible" see 42 C.J.S. p 409 note 75.1, "natural" see 65 C.J.S. p 40 note 38, "necessary" see 65 C.J.S. p 270 note 66.1, "practicable,"<sup>20</sup> "probable,"<sup>21</sup> and "susceptible."<sup>22</sup>

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.<sup>23</sup>

POSSIBLY. By any power, mental or physical, that is possible; by extreme or improbable chance; perhaps.<sup>24</sup>

letters or dispatches and were kept or placed at fixed stations,<sup>25</sup> and in one sense the word means a mode of conveying written or unwritten intelligence to and from appointed stations at regular intervals or whenever the performance of such service may properly be required.<sup>26</sup>

In a different sense, a piece of timber, metal (solid or built-up), or other solid substance, of considerable size, set upright, and intended as a support to a weight or structure resting upon it, or as a firm point of attachment for something.<sup>27</sup>

The word "post" is also defined as meaning an office or employment; a position, as of trust or emolument; situation; especially, a public office;<sup>28</sup> and in this sense the word "post" has been held to be synonymous with "office" see Officers § 1 a, and "position" see ante p 231 note 53.

As a military term the word "post" is defined in Army and Navy § 104 a.

As a verb. It has been said that the popular meaning of the word "post," as a verb, corresponds with that meaning attached to it by lexicographers.<sup>29</sup> It is defined as meaning to advertise;<sup>30</sup> to publish, announce, or advertise by or as by the use of a placard;<sup>31</sup> to placard;<sup>32</sup> to attach to a post, a wall, or other usual place of affixing public notices;<sup>33</sup> to attach to a signpost or other usual place of affixing public notices;<sup>34</sup> to nail, attach, affix, or otherwise fasten up physically and to display in a conspicuous manner, and not theoretically;<sup>35</sup> to bring to the notice or attention of the public by affixing to a post<sup>36</sup> or wall,<sup>37</sup> or putting up in some public place;<sup>38</sup> to stick up in a public place;<sup>39</sup> as, to post a notice<sup>40</sup> or playbill.<sup>41</sup>

The word "post" is further defined as meaning to dispatch by post or mail; to place in the post office or mail box for transmittal; to mail; to send through the post office.<sup>42</sup>

Posting. The present participle of "post."<sup>43</sup> When the word "posting" is employed in the sense of dispatching mail matter it means placing in the post office or in a letter box,<sup>44</sup> and, when the term is used as denoting the act of putting up a notice in a public place, it has been held that "posting" is not made by printing or recording a notice in a book or on a card and keeping it on a desk.<sup>45</sup>

The word "posting" is also employed as meaning the giving of notice to a tavern dealer not to sell intoxicating liquors to a certain person, as stated in Intoxicating Liquors § 440.

Posting of rates by carriers of goods is treated in Carriers § 302 a (1), and by carriers of passengers in Carriers § 572. Posting of notice by innkeepers regarding the deposit of property of guests to establish a limitation of liability in the event of loss is discussed in Innkeepers § 17 c (2).

Posted. Preterit and past participle of "post."<sup>46</sup> Among bookkeepers the word "posted" is a well-known term meaning to transfer original entries of business transactions from a day book or journal to a methodically abridged and classified record called a ledger.<sup>47</sup>

As a prefix. After; afterwards.<sup>48</sup>

Mail matter. The term "mail matter" includes letters, packets, etc., received for transmission and to be transmitted by post to the persons to whom such matter is directed.<sup>13</sup> It does not include telegraphic correspondence as such.<sup>14</sup>

§ 2. Control and Regulation of Postal Service

The control and regulation of the postal service is vested in congress by the federal Constitution.

By the Constitution of the United States article

I, § 8, power is vested in congress to establish post offices and post roads.<sup>15</sup> This power embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country.<sup>16</sup> When the power to establish post offices and post roads was surrendered to the congress it was as a complete power, and the grant carried with it the right to exercise all the powers which made that power effective.<sup>17</sup>

Under its postal power congress may designate what shall be carried in the mail, as discussed infra § 21, the routes over which the mail shall be carried,<sup>18</sup> the offices where letters and other documents shall be received to be distributed or forwarded,<sup>19</sup> the transportation of the mail,<sup>20</sup> and it may prescribe all measures necessary to secure its safe and speedy transit, and the prompt delivery of its contents.<sup>21</sup>

In conducting the post office department, the United States is engaged in discharging a governmental function.<sup>22</sup> However, the power of congress over the mails is not absolute.<sup>23</sup> It must be considered in the light of definite prohibitions in post office on mail matter handled there; and as a verb it means to put a postmark on, as a letter.—Application of George, 57 N.Y.S.2d 494, 496, 185 Misc. 671.

the federal Constitution<sup>24</sup> and is subject to the limitations imposed by the Bill of Rights.<sup>25</sup> Congress may not exercise its postal powers to meet evils which are not spread or perpetuated by the use of the mails.<sup>26</sup>

Power of states. The postal power of congress is not subject to state authority<sup>27</sup> and the states may not interfere with federal activities under the postal power.<sup>28</sup>

§ 3. — Post Roads and Post Routes

Congress has established various post roads and post routes, but the post roads are the property of the states through which they pass.

Acting under its constitutional authority, congress has enacted legislation, 39 U.S.C.A. § 481, establishing various post roads,<sup>29</sup> such as all the waters of the United States during the time the mail is carried thereon,<sup>30</sup> all railroads or parts of railroads and all air routes which are now, and hereafter may be, in operation,<sup>31</sup> all canals during the time the mail is carried thereon,<sup>32</sup> and all letter carrier routes established in any city or town for the collection and delivery of mail matter.<sup>33</sup> It is also provided by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 482, that all public roads and highways which are kept up and maintained as such are post routes.<sup>34</sup>

The power to establish post roads, it is said, was given to enable the general government "to make, repair, keep open, and improve post roads, whenever the exercise of any such independent, national power shall be deemed proper for effectuating the satisfactory transportation of the mail,"<sup>35</sup> and is generally construed to mean such roads as were regularly laid out by authority of the states or by counties under the laws of the states.<sup>36</sup> Nevertheless congress may continue as a post route a road once established as a post road even after it shall have been discontinued as a state road,<sup>37</sup> and congress may also construct de novo a post road with-

(2) Provision of New York civil rights law forbidding labor organizations from denying membership therein because of race, color, or creed, as applied to railway postal clerks association, is not repugnant to constitutional provision conferring on congress the authority over postal matters, and hence is not unconstitutional as an attempt to regulate a federal instrumentality since the law does not impinge on federal mail service or the power of the government to conduct it.—Railway Mail Ass'n v. ## II. POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, POST OFFICES, POSTMASTER, AND OTHER OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

§ 4. Postmaster General

- a. In general
- b. Power to negotiate and conclude postal conventions
- c. Liability

a. In General

The management of the business of the post office is lodged with the postmaster general and his assistants.

By statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 361 et seq, the management of the post office business of the country is placed in the hands of the postmaster general and his assistants,<sup>47</sup> and the postmaster general is vested with a wide discretion in the management thereof.<sup>48</sup> It is his duty to superintend generally the business of,<sup>49</sup> and to execute all laws relating to, the postal service.<sup>50</sup> To this end he has power to promulgate postal regulations which are controlling and have the force of laws,<sup>51</sup> subject to the limitations that the regulations must not be inconsistent with the Postal Act<sup>52</sup> and that they do not trench on legislative power but are designed and purport only to be administrative in character.<sup>53</sup>

Nevertheless the postmaster general is merely the agent of the government; and none of his acts except those which are within the scope of his authority and conformable to law are obligatory on the government,<sup>54</sup> and where rights, duties, and obligations are defined by statute they cannot be taken away or abridged by regulations promulgated by him.<sup>55</sup>

Control by president. In the discharge of those duties which are prescribed by law the postmaster general is not subject to the control of the president.<sup>56</sup>

b. Power to Negotiate and Conclude Postal Conventions

The postmaster general is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the president, to negotiate and conclude postal treaties or conventions between the United States and foreign countries.

By statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 372, the postmaster general is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the president, to negotiate and conclude postal treaties or conventions between the United States and foreign countries.<sup>57</sup> Postal conventions are a part of the postal laws and regulations,<sup>58</sup> but it has been held that they are not statutes or laws because they are not enacted by congress.<sup>59</sup> Postal conventions have the same force and effect as any other regulation issued by the postmaster general under authority of law.<sup>60</sup> By a convention concluded under this authority all matters may be provided for which are appropriate subjects of regulation by the post office department.<sup>61</sup>

In the absence of an enabling statute, the postmaster general is not authorized to negotiate a postal convention providing for the payment of indemnity for the loss of registered articles or letters;<sup>62</sup> but authority has been conferred by a statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 381, permitting him to establish a uniform system of registration, and to provide for a limited indemnity for first-class registered matter lost in the mails.<sup>63</sup>

c. Liability

The postmaster general is not responsible for the negligence of postmasters or their deputies or assistants.

The postmaster general is not responsible for the negligence of postmasters or their deputies or assistants.<sup>64</sup> Public policy requires the recognition and application of this rule.<sup>65</sup>

§ 5. Chief Clerk

Where the official duties of the chief clerk of the post office department embrace all matters relating to finance in the department, he is not entitled to charge a commission for negotiating loans for the use of the department.

Under a postal regulation providing for a division of finance under the superintendence of the chief clerk who shall be treasurer of the department, the official duties of the chief clerk of the post office department embrace all matters relating to finance in that department, and in consequence he is not entitled to charge a commission for negotiating loans for the use of the department.<sup>66</sup>

§ 6. Post Offices

b. Lease of buildings for post offices

a. In General

The postmaster general is required by law to establish post offices at such places as he may deem expedient on post roads established by law.

By express statutory provision, 39 U.S.C.A. § 1, the postmaster general is required to establish post offices at such places as he may deem expedient on post roads established by law.<sup>67</sup> The power to discontinue post offices is incident to the power to establish them<sup>68</sup> unless there is some provision in the acts of congress restraining its exercise,<sup>69</sup> and postmasters occupy their offices subject to the contingency that such offices may be so discontinued.<sup>70</sup> Under the statutes, 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 2, 3, the power to discontinue post offices on designated grounds is now expressly conferred by statute, subject to the limitation that no post office established at any county seat shall be abolished or discontinued by reason of any consolidation of post offices made by the postmaster general;<sup>71</sup> and, where such consolidation has taken place, such post office must be reestablished regardless of any view the postmaster general may entertain in respect of the public interests affected.<sup>72</sup>

Removal. Under a statute providing that a post office in a designated city shall not be removed from its present location until after a certain date and that remonstrants against its removal shall indemnify the government for any additional expenses growing out of any contract for another site, if the post office is illegally removed from its present location, it cannot be restored thereto unless the indemnity provided for is furnished, and this indemnity must be tendered in due form by the remonstrants and within a reasonable time.<sup>73</sup>

Acquisition of property for post offices. The federal government has authority under the federal Constitution to acquire property necessary or suitable for post offices.<sup>74</sup> By act of congress, 40 U.S.C.A. § 341, the secretary of the treasury is authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condem-

b. Lease of Buildings for Post Offices

The postmaster general is authorized to lease premises for the use of post offices of certain classes.

The postmaster general, under the power to establish post offices, may designate the places, that is, the localities, at which the mails are to be received,<sup>79</sup> and he may lease property to be used for a post office where the power to do so is expressly conferred on him by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 11, or is necessarily implied.<sup>80</sup>

Requisites of lease. In the absence of a statutory requirement, the contracts of the post office department for the renting of post office accommodations need not be in writing.<sup>81</sup>

Termination of lease. The lease may be canceled on the occurrence of such contingencies as may be provided for in the lease,<sup>82</sup> such as a provision that on notice to the lessor the lease may be canceled by the government whenever the post office department shall decide to move the office into a government-owned building which shall have been provided for it.<sup>83</sup> A statute providing that a lease shall cease and terminate whenever a post office can be moved into a government building becomes a part of a lease executed by the government although no express provision is inserted in the lease,<sup>84</sup> and the repeal of the statute after the lease has been executed does not abrogate the provision as an implied term of the lease.<sup>85</sup>

Where the tenancy of the United States on premises leased for a post office is from year to year, it may be terminated by giving such notice as is required by the law of the state in which the property is situated.<sup>86</sup>

Rents. Where the government breaches the lease, the lessor is entitled to recover such rents as are due.<sup>87</sup> The amount of rental which the lessor may recover depends on the terms of the lease.<sup>88</sup> Where the lease is breached by the government, the lessor can claim no better position as to the amount which he may recover than that which would have existed if the contract had been performed by both parties.<sup>89</sup> Where the post office is removed prior to the expiration of the term of the lease, there must be deducted from the stipulated rental such amounts as were saved by

Execution of new lease

Where property was leased to the government for post office purposes in October 1922, in accordance with negotiations begun in 1921, with the understanding that if and when the Act of March 3, 1885, 23 U.S.St. at L. p 386, prohibiting the insertion of a noncancellable clause in post office leases was repealed, a lease without such clause would be substituted for the original lease; and where subsequent to the repeal of said act by the Act of June 19, 1922, 42 U.S.St. at L. p 655, a new lease, without such cancellation clause, was prepared by the post office department and submitted to the lessor in December 1923, and properly signed and recorded, it was held that the second lease was executed solely for the purpose of effectuating the original understanding of the parties, was a valid lease, and was not void for want of consideration.—Twin Cities Properties, Clayton, Mo., v. #### Rent as dependant on annual appropriation

Where a lease has been entered into under the express authorization of an act of congress, the obligation of the government to pay the rent stipulated in the lease was not dependent on an annual appropriation by congress to pay the rent as it accrued.—Twin Cities Properties v. U. S., 90 Ct.Cl. 119.

the lessor by reason of the removal of the post office, such as expenses for heat, light, power, and other services.<sup>90</sup> One who has leased premises to be used as a post office is not entitled to recover the rental value thereof, where he has defaulted under an express contract by not paving a street and grading an alley in accordance with the proposal for lease.<sup>91</sup>

Where the lease by its terms may be canceled on notice by the post office prior to the expiration of the term of the lease, the lessor is not entitled to recover rent for any period subsequent to a valid cancellation of the lease.<sup>92</sup> Where the post office is continued on the leased premises after the expiration of the lease with no agreement as to rental, the lessor is entitled to reasonable compensation for such occupancy.<sup>93</sup>

In the absence of a provision to the contrary in the lease, the lessor is not, on the abandonment of the demised premises by the post office in violation of the lease, required to relet for the protection of the government, but the lessor may at his election suffer the premises to remain vacant and recover his rent for the remainder of the term.<sup>94</sup>

- a. In general
- b. Selection and qualification
- c. Title to, and possession of, office
- d. Term of office, removal, and vacancies
- e. Compensation
- f. Exemptions
- g. Duties and liabilities

a. In General

A postmaster is an officer under the United States, and in order to be eligible he must be competent to take the required oath of office.

A postmaster is an officer under the United States and his office is one of profit.<sup>95</sup> Postmasters are not common carriers and there is no analogy between them.<sup>96</sup>

Eligibility. One who is not in legal contemplation competent to take the required oath of office is not eligible to appointment as postmaster.<sup>97</sup>

b. Selection and Qualification

The appointment and qualification of postmasters are regulated by federal statutes.

The statutes, 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 31-31d, make provision for the appointment of postmasters.<sup>98</sup> Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 31, nomination by the president, confirmation by the senate, the signing of the commission and affixing to it the seal of the United States are all the acts necessary to render the appointment complete.<sup>99</sup> The appointment is not rendered invalid by the subsequent death of the president before the transmission of the commission to the appointee<sup>1</sup> even though it is necessary that the person appointed should perform certain acts before he can legally enter on the duties of the office.<sup>2</sup>

Qualification. The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 34, requires that a bond shall be given by every postmaster.<sup>3</sup> The bond is a part of an integrated system of postal regulations<sup>4</sup> and the primary purpose of the bond is to protect the government and to insure the inviolability of government property.<sup>5</sup> Elaborate provisions have been promulgated by the post office department regarding surety companies which are authorized to write bonds, the limitation on the penal sum of the bond with relation to the paid-up capital and surplus of the surety, and the status and qualification of surety companies.<sup>6</sup>

6. U.S.—U. S., for Use and Benefit

Under statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 377, the bond must be made to the United States.<sup>7</sup> The bond must be duly executed by the postmaster; otherwise it is not such a bond as is provided for by the statute.<sup>8</sup> Likewise, it does not constitute a binding contract until approved and accepted by the postmaster general.<sup>9</sup>

c. Title to, and Possession of, Office

A duly appointed and qualified postmaster is authorized to take charge of the post office to which he has been appointed and to demand and receive government property in the custody of his predecessor.

After a postmaster has been duly appointed and has qualified by giving bond, he is authorized to take charge of the post office and to demand and receive from his predecessor in office the government property in his custody;<sup>10</sup> and for this purpose it is lawful for him or for his assistant acting under his authority to enter the post office and, if the property be unlawfully withheld from him, to take it by force, if necessary;<sup>11</sup> and this is so although the post office is a part of the building the title to which is in the former postmaster who is in possession at the time of entry.<sup>12</sup> A person is not entitled to take charge of the office of postmaster where the postmaster general fails or refuses to deliver his commission to him and another person is nominated and confirmed as the postmaster.<sup>13</sup>

The generally accepted method of testing the right of a postmaster to hold office is to sue at law in the court of claims for salary.<sup>14</sup> Even if a suit to obtain possession of the office of postmaster is maintainable in equity, the postmaster general is an indispensable party.<sup>15</sup>

The president has the power to remove postmasters without the consent of the senate.

The president has, by virtue of the federal Constitution, article II § 2 clause 2, the sole power of removal of postmasters, the power not being subject in its exercise to the consent of the senate.<sup>16</sup> As much of the statute as attempts to make the president's power of removal of a postmaster dependent on the consent of the senate is in violation of the provisions set forth, and invalid.<sup>17</sup> No particular form of removal of a postmaster is prescribed; if the incumbent has notice that he has been removed and another appointed, and the appointing power in fact makes such appointment and recognizes the appointee as the legal officer, it is sufficient.<sup>18</sup>

Suspension, vacation, or termination of office. Under the Tenure of Office Act, 16 U.S.St. at L. p. 6, which is no longer in force, the president had authority to suspend a postmaster, his commission being in terms "subject to the conditions prescribed by law."<sup>19</sup> Notwithstanding a statute providing that no person shall hold the office of postmaster who does not reside at the place where the office is kept, until action is taken by the postmaster general, a postmaster does not vacate his office by remaining out of the neighborhood of the office.<sup>20</sup> If he keeps an office by an assistant, he is still responsible for the department and to individuals who should be injured by any negligence of duty in the office.<sup>21</sup>

some authority to the contrary,<sup>23</sup> the better view is that his term of office does not expire on a change in the class of his office by increase or decrease of salary.<sup>24</sup> He is entitled to remain in office during the term for which he was appointed unless sooner removed according to law.<sup>25</sup>

Filling vacancies. Under the federal Constitution, article XI § 2, providing that the president shall have power to fill up "all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate" by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of the next session, where a vacancy in a postmastership occurred during the session of the senate which failed to confirm an appointment, the president may then in recess appoint a person to fill the vacancy by temporary commission to expire at the end of the next session of the senate.<sup>26</sup> The expression in the constitution "all vacancies that may happen during the recess" signifies all vacancies that may happen to exist during the recess.<sup>27</sup>

e. Compensation

- (1) In general
- (2) Expenses connected with running office
- (3) Readjustment and increase
- (4) Withholding commissions

(1) In General

The compensation allowed postmasters is fixed and controlled by congress.

Congress has power to fix and control the salaries of postmasters, and an amount fixed at any one time may be added to, or taken from, at will.<sup>28</sup>

Postmasters of first, second, and third classes. Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 54, now superseded by 39 U.S.C.A. § 858, provision was made for compensation to postmasters of the first, second, and third classes.<sup>29</sup> The whole theory of the statutes, it is said, is that every postmaster shall receive a salary dependent on, and regulated by, the amount of business done at his office;<sup>30</sup> and this is represented by the normal and natural sale of stamps, not sales of stamps unlawfully induced.<sup>31</sup> If there are no receipts in an office and nothing on which to base the compensation of the postmaster, no allowance can be made therefor.<sup>32</sup>

Postmasters of fourth class. Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 57, now superseded by 39 U.S.C.A. § 858, provision was made for compensation of postmasters of the fourth class.<sup>33</sup>

Compensation during suspension. A person appointed by the president to perform the duties of a postmaster, suspended under the Tenure of Office Act, is entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office while he performs the duties of the suspended officer.<sup>34</sup> The latter is "not entitled to pay or emolument while not performing its duties because of his suspension."<sup>35</sup>

(2) Expenses Connected with Running Office

The postmaster general is authorized by statute to allow postmasters of the first and second class reasonable sums for expenses connected with the running of their offices.

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 64, permits the postmaster general to allow postmasters of the first and second class reasonable sums for expenses connected with the running of their offices.<sup>36</sup> This

Assigning office of fourth class to third class

Where the office of a postmaster of the fourth class is assigned to the third class at a designated sal-

Commission on stamps canceled

Statute authorizing compensation of postmasters by commissions on canceled stamps "on matter actually mailed at their office" manifests intent that compensation be made on the basis of business regularly done under normal circumstances.—Fussell v. U. S., supra.

Under former statute

Under the act of June 22, 1854, 10

statute, it is said, allows the postmaster general to do justice to his subordinates in the manner prescribed,<sup>37</sup> but does not invest him with discretion to allow reimbursement to one postmaster and refuse it to another.<sup>38</sup> It has further been held that the provision that no such allowance shall be made except on the order of the postmaster general merely prohibits such allowance from being made by other administrative officers,<sup>39</sup> and does not exclude a postmaster from judicial redress.<sup>40</sup>

Under postal regulations by which the department fixes a maximum sum which it will allow for rent, the allowance made by the department to a postmaster for the purpose of renting an office is not an absolute allowance, but is to be disbursed by him as agent of the United States, and must be accounted for under the strict law of agency.<sup>41</sup> If he secures an office for less than the allowance, he is entitled to retain therefrom only the amount actually expended.<sup>42</sup> If he contracts to pay more than the allowance for a building or room, and sublets a portion for a sum which, together with the allowance, exceeds the rent paid, he must credit the excess to the government to be deducted from the allowance.<sup>43</sup>

(3) Readjustment and Increase

Salaries of postmasters of the various classes are to be readjusted in accordance with statutory directions.

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 54, now superseded by 39 U.S.C.A. § 858, which provides for readjustment of the salaries of postmasters of the various classes at stated intervals, the postmaster general is to ascertain the revenue of each office at designated intervals and, on a state of facts to be furnished under oath by the postmaster, he fixes the compensation;<sup>44</sup> and this process is called "readjustment."<sup>45</sup> After a postmaster's salary has been fixed, a readjustment by the postmaster general must be made before it can be increased.<sup>46</sup> The readjustment is an executive act,<sup>47</sup> requiring the exercise of skill and discretion,<sup>48</sup> taking effect in all cases prospectively;<sup>49</sup> and, if it is not performed, the law imposes no obligation on the government to pay an increased salary;<sup>50</sup> and the postmaster cannot recover for adjustment of salary unless there has actually been a readjustment by the postmaster general.<sup>51</sup> Courts cannot treat executive duties as performed when they have been neglected, or enforce rights dependent for their existence on a prior performance by an executive officer of duties he failed to perform.<sup>52</sup>

Mandamus to compel readjustment. If the postmaster general fails to do his duty in the matter of readjusting a postmaster's salary, he may be compelled by mandamus to do so,<sup>53</sup> but the court cannot direct the postmaster general as to what adjustment should be made.<sup>54</sup> After a readjustment has been made by the postmaster general, he is beyond the reach of the compulsory process of mandamus;<sup>55</sup> nor in these circumstances will mandamus issue to compel a subsequent postmaster general to readjust the salary so fixed by his predecessor.<sup>56</sup>

(4) Withholding Commissions

The postmaster general is authorized by statute to withhold the commissions of a postmaster in certain instances.

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 45, authorizes the postmaster general to withhold commissions of a postmaster in certain instances.<sup>57</sup> The statute is applicable only to postmasters whose accounts are pending and unsettled, and gives the postmaster general no authority to make an order reducing the compensation of a postmaster after his accounts have been settled and allowed.<sup>58</sup> The postmaster general may, in a proper case, withhold commissions,<sup>59</sup> but, having allowed them, he cannot recover them without due process of law.<sup>60</sup> The statute does not imply that the postmaster general shall impose a penalty or forfeiture on the postmaster as a punishment;<sup>61</sup> but inasmuch as the returns are false they may not be used as a basis to fix the compensation,<sup>62</sup> and, therefore, power is given the postmaster general to fix the compensation;<sup>63</sup> and in doing so he has to consider the circumstances and determine what is reasonable, approximating what the postmaster would have received if his returns had been correct, whether the returns were false for inadvertence, incompetency in himself, or his assistant, or for the purpose of fraudulently increasing his compensation.<sup>64</sup>

An order made in pursuance of the statute is not conclusive on a postmaster that his returns of business are actually false in fact,<sup>65</sup> or a conclusive determination that the postmaster is not entitled to any commissions as such,<sup>66</sup> or that his compensation shall be absolutely fixed and limited by the allowance made.<sup>67</sup>

f. Exemptions

In the absence of statute, a postmaster is not exempt from road duty or from arrest in civil cases.

A postmaster is not exempt from road duty imposed on the inhabitants by the legislature of the state of which he is a citizen, in the absence of an act of congress exempting postmasters from such duty.<sup>68</sup> The mere incumbency of the office of postmaster constitutes no privilege from arrest in civil cases in an action of tort for obtaining credit under false pretenses.<sup>69</sup>

g. Duties and Liabilities

(1) In general

(2) As to moneys coming into postmaster's hands

(3) As to mail matter

(1) In General

The postmaster is under the duty to locate the post office and to continue it at a place suitable and reasonably convenient for the use of the public.

In the discharge of his duties as such, a postmaster is bound to locate the post office and to continue it at a place suitable and reasonably convenient for the use of the public;<sup>70</sup> he is bound to exercise his judgment for the public benefit and any contract by which this exercise of his judgment is sold for his private emolument interferes with the proper discharge of his duties as a public officer, and such contract is against public policy and void.<sup>71</sup>

A postmaster acting by legal authority as the agent of the United States government in renting premises for a post office is not personally liable for rent after removal of the post office from the premises rented by direction of the government.<sup>72</sup>

Arrangement of schedules for delivery and collection of mail. The postmaster is authorized, and it is his duty, to arrange all schedules for the collection and delivery of mails,<sup>73</sup> and so to arrange them as to conform to the instructions of the postmaster general.<sup>74</sup>

(2) As to Moneys Coming into Postmaster's Hands

The postmaster is under the duty to keep safely all moneys which may come into his hands by virtue of his official position.

It is the duty of a postmaster to keep safely all moneys which may come into his hands by virtue of his official position,<sup>75</sup> and to account for and disburse them as required by law and by the rules of the United States post office department,<sup>76</sup> although they may have been stolen or embezzled without his fault.<sup>77</sup> He must pay over the public funds in his hands at the expiration of each successive

(3) As to Mail Matter

- (a) In general
- (b) Destruction or theft of stamps
- (c) Refusal to deliver mail
- (d) Loss or theft of mail

(a) In General

Postmasters are under the duty to care for and to forward mail matter coming into their hands.

Postmasters are under obligation to care for,<sup>81</sup> and to forward,<sup>82</sup> or, as discussed infra § 31, make delivery of, mail matter coming into their hands, subject to the limitation that the matter is not such as the law declares to be nonmailable.

Delivery of registered letter containing bank deposit to impostor. Where an impostor, by forging a depositor's name, induced a bank to send the deposit by registered mail, and, by impersonating the depositor, induced the postmaster to deliver the package, the postmaster was not liable to the defrauded depositor, there being no privity of contract between them.<sup>83</sup>

(b) Destruction or Theft of Stamps

A postmaster is entitled to credit for stamps which have been destroyed without his fault before he sold or used them, but he is liable if stamps are stolen or lost or they get into the hands of persons who might use them.

A postmaster should have credit for stamps which he is charged with when he can show that they were destroyed without fault of his own before he sold or used them;<sup>84</sup> but if the stamps should be stolen or lost or should get into the hands of those who might use them and thus deprive the government of so much revenue, the postmaster should be held for them.<sup>85</sup> If he destroys them by his own wanton act or negligently suffers them to be destroyed, he is liable.<sup>86</sup>

If stamps were sent to a postmaster by mail, they will be charged against him at the time they were sent, and the presumption is that he received them;<sup>87</sup> but, if the postmaster general is satisfied by proof furnished by the postmaster that he never received the stamps, he is not legally responsible for them.<sup>88</sup> If a postmaster asserts that he returned stamps to the department, which never came, and proves that he mailed them, he is entitled to credit, since in sending them he does his duty and the subsequent loss of them is not his loss.<sup>89</sup>

(c) Refusal to Deliver Mail

The wrongful refusal of a postmaster to deliver a letter or newspaper to a person to whom it was sent constitutes a tort.

A postmaster who wrongfully refuses to deliver a letter or newspaper to a person to whom it was sent is guilty of a tortious act which renders him liable for the resulting damages.<sup>90</sup> The conversion should be clearly proved,<sup>91</sup> and withholding of the mails should be shown to be without cause or right,<sup>92</sup> and plaintiff must establish his title thereto by unquestioned evidence.<sup>93</sup>

Either trover<sup>94</sup> or case<sup>95</sup> is a proper remedy; and it has been held that the aggrieved party also has a remedy by replevin<sup>96</sup> or mandamus,<sup>97</sup> but not by injunction.<sup>98</sup>

(d) Loss or Theft of Mail

- aa. In general
- bb. Default or misfeasance of clerks or assistants
- cc. Actions to enforce liability

aa. In General

A postmaster is liable for damages resulting from the loss or theft of mail matter which has come into his hands where such loss or theft is due to his negligence or wrongful act.

A postmaster is liable for damages resulting from the loss or theft of mail matter which has come into his hands where such loss or theft is due to his negligence<sup>1</sup> or wrongful act.<sup>2</sup> Nevertheless, a postmaster is not liable as a common carrier<sup>3</sup> or as an insurer.<sup>4</sup> He is held to ordinary diligence in the discharge of the duties of his office, and can only be made liable for loss occasioned by want of such diligence.<sup>5</sup>

bb. Default or Misfeasance of Clerks or Assistants

A postmaster is responsible for the default and misfeasance of his clerks or assistants appointed by him where he has been negligent in his selection or in his superintendence of such clerks or assistants.

A postmaster is not responsible for the default and misfeasance of his clerks or assistants, although appointed by him, and under his control, unless it be shown that the postmaster was negligent in not exercising proper care and prudence in the selection of suitable and competent persons to perform the duties of clerks or deputy assistants,<sup>6</sup> or unless it be shown that the postmaster himself was negligent in the duty resting on him properly to superintend such clerks or assistants in the performance of the particular acts or duty, the doing of which or the omission to do which caused the loss and injury.<sup>7</sup> On the other hand, if he is negligent in either respect mentioned, he is liable for any loss resulting from such negligence.<sup>8</sup> Exemption from liability for default or misfeasance of his clerks or assistants is available to the postmaster only in cases where they are appointed in pursuance of some law expressly authorizing it, so that by virtue of the law and the appointment the appointees become in some sort public officers themselves; and if a postmaster employs a clerk or assistant independently of express authority, who is paid by him out of his own salary or means, he is liable for his default or misfeasance as any private person would be for the acts of his agent or employee; in such cases the doctrine of respondeat superior applies.<sup>9</sup> If the loss be occasioned by the negligence of clerks who were not regularly appointed and sworn as his assistants, the postmaster will be responsible.<sup>10</sup>

Action against personal representative. Whether or not an action will lie against a postmaster in his lifetime for money feloniously taken out of a letter by one of his clerks, it has been held that no action will lie therefor against his personal representatives after his death.<sup>11</sup>

cc. Actions to Enforce Liability

State courts have jurisdiction of actions for damages resulting from loss or theft of mail caused by the negligence of the postmaster in the discharge of his official duties.

State courts have jurisdiction of actions for damages accruing from loss or theft of mail caused by negligence of the postmaster in the discharge of his official duties.<sup>12</sup>

Case will lie against a postmaster for negligence whereby a letter containing money was stolen from his office;<sup>13</sup> but an action for money had and received is not a proper form of action to recover the money.<sup>14</sup>

Pleading. General rules of pleading in civil actions ordinarily are applicable,<sup>15</sup> including rules governing issues, proof, and variance.<sup>16</sup> Where it is intended to charge a postmaster for the negligence of his assistants, the pleadings must be made up according to the case, and his liability will result only from his own neglect in not properly superintending the discharge of their duties in his office.<sup>17</sup> However, a count in the alternative charging the loss to have been caused by the misfeasance of defendant or some other person employed by him is good on general demurrer.<sup>18</sup> With respect to negligence, it will be sufficient to declare generally that the loss complained of was occasioned by defendant's carelessness and negligence.<sup>19</sup>

Evidence. General rules governing evidence in civil actions usually apply<sup>20</sup> with respect to the burden of proof and presumptions<sup>21</sup> and the admissibility of evidence<sup>22</sup> and its weight and sufficiency.<sup>23</sup>

Review. General rules pertaining to the review of judgments and orders in civil actions ordinarily are applicable.<sup>24</sup>

The sureties on the bond of a postmaster are liable for various losses, including loss of registered mail resulting from the negligence of the postmaster.

Liability on the bond of a postmaster is governed by the terms of the bond, the duties secured, and the statute under which the bond is given, and, under this rule, sureties on postmasters' bonds have been held responsible for various losses.<sup>25</sup>

Registered letters or packages. Where registered mail is lost through the negligence of a postmaster, the sureties on his bond, conditioned as required by statute, are liable for the loss,<sup>26</sup> and the sureties are liable on such bond for money embezzled by the postmaster from registered letters.<sup>27</sup> It has also been held that the postmaster and his sureties are liable absolutely on the bond for the value of registered mail delivered to the postmaster, which was stolen without negligence on his part;<sup>28</sup> but later decisions, among which is a decision of the supreme court of the United States, have definitely decided the rule to the contrary.<sup>29</sup> Under postal regulations a postmaster and his sureties are responsible for registered mail lost when a post office has been robbed only if the depredation or loss is due to negligence or disregard of the regulations;<sup>30</sup> and in order to authorize a recovery on the bond, there must not only be negligence or disregard of regulations, but there must be a causal connection between the loss and the negligence or disregard of regulations.<sup>31</sup> It has similarly been held in construing these regulations that a postmaster is not liable for the loss of a registered package, which in the usual course came into the possession of a sworn clerk in his office, not appointed by him, but in the classified civil service, without his knowledge, and which was lost or stolen

In an action against a postmaster for the value of the contents of registered letters alleged to have been lost, in the absence of any showing to the contrary on the record, the appellate court will, in order to sustain the rulings of the court below, presume that his clerk or assistant is employed without express authority.—Raisler v. ### (2) Public Money or Property

A postmaster and his sureties are liable on a bond conditioned on the faithful discharge of his duty for the loss of public moneys coming into the hands of the postmaster.

A postmaster and his sureties are liable on a bond conditioned on the faithful discharge of his duty for the loss of public moneys coming into the hands of the postmaster, although such moneys may have been lost without fault or negligence on his part.<sup>33</sup> The policy of the government of the United States requires that principals and sureties on the bond of postmasters shall be held liable at all events,<sup>34</sup> and the only exceptions are those provided for by the acts of congress.<sup>35</sup> It has been held, however, that money collected on C. O. D. parcels and held by a postmaster for use in purchasing money orders to be sent to the senders of the parcels is not public money until it is used to purchase money orders, for the embezzlement of which the postmaster's bond is liable, within the statute prescribing the duty of postmasters in respect of public moneys coming into their possession.<sup>36</sup> Similarly it has been held that a registered package containing money belonging to the United States, but which is not such that it may be "ordered by the Postmaster General to be transferred or paid out," is not public money, within such statute, and that a postmaster and his sureties are not liable as insurers under the statute for the loss thereof.<sup>37</sup>

Robbery by postmaster. The sureties on a postmaster's bond are liable to the government for loss of public moneys due to an act of robbery by the postmaster of a carrier to whom he had delivered the money to be carried through the mails to the postal depository.<sup>38</sup>

(3) Money Order Funds

A postmaster and his sureties are liable on his bond for money order funds received by him and not accounted for.

In addition to the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 46, requiring postmasters to keep safely all public moneys collected by them or which may come into their possession, it is further provided by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 736, that "all money received for the sale of money orders, including all fees thereon . . . shall be deemed and taken to be money-order funds and money in the Treasury of the United States."<sup>39</sup> Money order funds are accordingly part of the public moneys of the United States, as considered infra § 17, and a postmaster and his sureties are liable on his bond for money order funds received by him and not accounted for,<sup>40</sup> although they may have been lost through burglary without fault or negligence on his part;<sup>41</sup> and his liability is not affected by the fact that the United States furnished the building and the safe therein, both of which he was required to use and from which the property was taken by the burglars.<sup>42</sup> The only way provided by statute for a postmaster to obtain relief in case of robbery or larceny is by applying to the postmaster general,<sup>43</sup> in which case, if the evidence is satisfactory to that officer, he may, in his discretion, allow the postmaster credit for the amount thus lost.<sup>44</sup> So, also, the postmaster and his sureties are liable for money order funds embezzled by a clerk in charge of the money order accounts and money order funds of the post office,<sup>45</sup> and the facts that the clerk who embezzled money was not appointed by the principal in the bond and that the tenure of office of the clerk was held under a civil service act do not affect the obligation of the bond.<sup>46</sup>

It has been held, however, that funds in other offices on which a postmaster could draw are not money order funds in his custody within the meaning of the statute and postal regulations.<sup>47</sup> Moneys collected on C. O. D. parcels and held by the postmaster for use in purchasing money orders to be sent to the senders of the parcels are not "money order funds" for the embezzlement of which the postmaster and his sureties are liable within the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 736, providing that "all money received for the sale of money-orders, including all fees thereon . . . shall be deemed and taken to be money-order funds and money in the Treasury of the United States."<sup>48</sup>

(4) Stamps; Funds Remitted to Depository

A postmaster and his sureties are liable on his bond for stamps received by him and not accounted for.

A postmaster and his sureties are liable on his bond for stamps received by him and not accounted for, although they may have been lost through burglary and without fault or negligence on his part;<sup>49</sup> and he is not relieved from such liability by the fact that the United States furnished the building and the safe therein, both of which he was required to use and from which the property was taken by the burglars.<sup>50</sup> A statute which provides "that it shall be the duty of the postmaster general to provide and furnish to all deputy postmasters, and to all other persons applying and paying therefor, suitable postage stamps," etc., authorizes the postmaster general to deliver postage stamps to a deputy postmaster without repayment; and the sureties on the official bond of a postmaster are liable for postage stamps so received by their principal.<sup>51</sup>

Funds remitted to depository. A postmaster and his sureties are not liable for loss of funds which, in the discharge of his official duty, the postmaster had remitted by registered package to the depository of his office by reason of the negligence or misconduct of the depository after the reception of the package by him.<sup>52</sup> This is so, although the postal regulations provide that the postmaster shall not take credit in his cash book or weekly statement for money sent by him until he has received the certificate of deposit.<sup>53</sup>

b. Amount Recoverable on Bond

A postmaster and his sureties are bound to pay the actual loss sustained by the government within the amount of the penalty fixed by the bond.

A postmaster and his sureties are bound to pay the actual loss which the government may sustain by any failure to discharge his duties faithfully<sup>54</sup> within the amount of the penalty fixed by the bond but not in excess thereof.<sup>55</sup> Where a registered package is lost through the negligence of the postmaster,<sup>56</sup> or money contained in a registered letter is embezzled by him,<sup>57</sup> the government's recovery is not limited to the sum which the government obligates itself to pay the sender of registered mail in case of loss, but it is entitled to recover from the sureties the full amount lost.<sup>58</sup>

c. Period of Liability

Unless otherwise qualified by statute the liability of sureties on the bond of a postmaster extends to and covers the due performance of his official duties during his term of office under the appointment or commission which placed him in office at the time the bond was given.

Except when and to the extent that the rule may have been changed or qualified by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 38,<sup>59</sup> the liability of sureties on the bond of a postmaster extends to and covers the due performance of his official duties during his term of office under the appointment or commission which placed him in office at the time the bond was given.<sup>60</sup> The exception in the statute applies as well to a vacancy caused by expiration of commission, as by removal, suspension, resignation, or death;<sup>61</sup> but it applies only in the case of a vacancy.<sup>62</sup> After the postmaster's commission has expired, it has been held that the sureties may lawfully assume possession of the post office and the government property therein and depute one of their number, or another person, as acting postmaster, to perform the duties of the office until a successor is appointed to take possession.<sup>63</sup>

Successor without color of authority

Where postmaster's son, after postmaster's death, assumed duties of postmaster without color of authority and thereafter postmaster's account showed a deficiency arising in part during service of postmaster and in part during service of his son, surety on postmaster's bond was liable for the defalcation, not only as to the postmaster, but also as to the son.—U. S. v. National Sur. Corp., D. C.N.J., 71 F.Supp. 14.

49 C.J. p 1143 note 88.

63. 20 Opinion Attorney General 447.

Successive bonds. While the sureties on a second bond are not liable for a shortage in the accounts of the postmaster occurring before the bond executed by them took effect,<sup>64</sup> equity may consider the two sets of sureties as jointly responsible for the defaults occurring after the giving of the second bond.<sup>65</sup>

Under the existing statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 36, whenever any postmaster is required to execute a new bond, all payments made by him after its execution may, if the postmaster general or the comptroller general deem it just, be applied first to discharge any balance which may be due from the postmaster under his old bond.<sup>66</sup>

d. Discharge from Liability

- (1) In general
- (2) Indulgence or forbearance

(1) In General

Various matters have been considered as discharging or failing to discharge the sureties on the bond of a postmaster, such as the taking of a second bond.

Various matters have been considered as discharging or failing to discharge the sureties on the bond of a postmaster.<sup>67</sup> The order of the postmaster general to the postmaster not to remit the money he may receive, but to retain it to answer his drafts, does not discharge the sureties,<sup>68</sup> although the order is issued subsequent to the execution of the bond.<sup>69</sup> The sureties are liable for noncompliance by the postmaster with subsequent as well as with past laws or orders until his official term expires if the orders are such as are justified by law.<sup>70</sup>

official bond by a postmaster does not discharge his sureties under the old bond either for the past or subsequent defaults of his principal,<sup>71</sup> unless the new bond is given under a statute which declares in terms or by just construction that it shall have that effect.<sup>72</sup>

(2) Indulgence or Forbearance

The sureties on a postmaster's bond are not discharged by mere indulgence or forbearance on the part of the government, but the sureties are discharged by the government's failure to bring suit on the bond within the time limited by statute.

Mere indulgence or forbearance on the part of the government toward a postmaster who is in default, in the absence of fraud, will not discharge his sureties from their obligations on his bond.<sup>73</sup> Likewise, the fact that the government continued a postmaster in office after discovery of a defalcation, and delayed to disclose it, will not relieve his sureties from liability for subsequent defalcations.<sup>74</sup>

Delay in bringing suit. In the absence of a statute so providing, neither a postmaster nor his sureties are discharged from liability on his bond by the neglect of the postmaster general to sue, within the time prescribed by law, for balances due from the postmaster.<sup>75</sup> The responsibility of the postmaster general is superadded to, not substituted for, that of the obligors.<sup>76</sup>

By statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 40, it is now provided that, if it shall appear on the settlement of the account of any postmaster that he is indebted to the United States, the sureties cannot be held liable for such indebtedness unless suit therefor shall be instituted within three years after the close of the account.<sup>77</sup> The statute commences to run from

Prior to the enactment of this or similar statutes, there was a conflict of authority as to whether moneys received subsequent to the execution of the last bond could, before its discharge, be applied to a former indebtedness accrued while the former bond was in force.—Postmaster-Gen. v. 67. Increase of responsibility

(1) An act of congress increasing rates of postage, and consequently the responsibility of the postmaster's sureties, will not discharge them.—Postmaster-Gen. v. Munger, C.C.N.Y., 19 F.Cas.No.11,309, 2 Paine 189.

(2) It would be otherwise, however, if the act of congress enlarged the powers of the postmaster, or superadded new duties, whereby he was made the receiver of other moneys than for postages.—Postmaster-Gen. v. Munger, supra.

Repeal of statute

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 40, was the time the postmaster's account is "closed," by audit and settlement,<sup>78</sup> not by the default or by the principal's ceasing to be postmaster.<sup>79</sup> Where the action on the bond is for recovery of amounts embezzled by a clerk during the postmaster's term of office, the statute begins to run when demand is made on the surety by a post office inspector under direction of an assistant postmaster general, and not when notice from the general accounting office is given to the surety.<sup>80</sup> Where an amended petition states a new and different cause of action not within the original lis pendens, it does not relate back to the commencement of the action so as to prevent limitations from running in favor of the sureties of a new cause of action alleged in the amendment.<sup>81</sup>

e. Proceedings to Enforce Liability

- (1) In general

Letter constituting settlement and closing of account

A letter from the general accounting office to the surety on former postmaster's official bond, stating that an audit of former postmaster's account showed a specified balance due the United States and that former postmaster was short in his fixed credit account in a stated amount, and requesting remittance to the postmaster at New York City, constituted a "settlement and closing of the account" of former postmaster within statute relieving surety from liability for principal's defalcation if suit therefor is not instituted within three years after the close of such account.—U. S. v. Bryant, D.C.Ky., 41 F.Supp. 1009.

Under former statute

By the act of March 3, 1835, 4 U.S. St. at L., pp 102, 103, c 64, § 3, the sureties on a postmaster's bond were discharged from all liability by two years' delay to bring suit after a default in not paying, when required by law, a quarterly balance found due by the auditor.—Postmaster-Gen. v. Rice, D.C.Pa., 19 F.Cas.No. 11,312, Gilp. 554—49 C.J. p 1144 note 6.

The rules governing the enforcement of officers' bonds, especially bonds of federal officers, ordinarily apply to the enforcement of bonds of postmasters except as it may otherwise be specifically provided by statute.<sup>82</sup> Such courts as are designated by statute have jurisdiction to entertain actions on bonds of postmasters.<sup>83</sup>

(2) Defenses

Various defenses have been urged and considered in actions on bonds of postmasters, including claims for credit.

In actions on bonds of postmasters various defenses have been urged.<sup>84</sup> In an action on a postmaster's bond to recover for money embezzled by him, it is not a defense that the senders of the letters were negligent in sending the money.<sup>85</sup> Voluntary payment to a creditor of the government may not be set up as a defense.<sup>86</sup> It is no defense to an action on the bond, to recover public funds unaccounted for, that such funds were embezzled by a clerk appointed under the civil service laws.<sup>87</sup>

Claims for credit. In an action on a postmaster's bond, a claim for a credit may be set up if the claim, in accordance with statutory requirements, has been duly presented to the department desig-

84. Matters urged as defense

Under post-office regulation prohibiting granting of credit on commissions to postmasters as respects mail diverted from other post offices, fact that such diversion was not solicited was no defense in action against postmaster and her surety for commissions retained and disallowed.—Fussell v. U. S., C.C.A.Fla., 100 F.2d 995.

Acquittal under indictment for making false and fraudulent returns of the business done at his office, for the purpose of increasing his compensation, is not a bar to an action by the United States on the bond of a postmaster to recover the amount found due, on the adjustment of his accounts, as shown by the same returns.—U. S. v. Jaedicke, D.C.Kan., 73 F. 100—49 C.J. p 1145 note 26.

nated by statute for allowance and rejected;<sup>88</sup> but such credit is not so available unless the claim had been presented and rejected in whole or in part before the commencement of the suit,<sup>89</sup> or unless, as provided by statute, at the time of trial it appears that defendant was in possession of vouchers not before in his power to procure and that he was prevented from presenting the claim for credit by some unavoidable accident.<sup>90</sup>

The statutory requirement of presentment for claims for allowance and rejection thereof does not prevent a postmaster, against whom suit is brought for default on his official bond, from defending by showing that the money, or a part thereof claimed by the government, never actually came into his hands, without presenting the claim to the post office department, and having it disallowed.<sup>91</sup>

(3) Persons Entitled to Sue

The postmaster general may sue on a postmaster's official bond, but, without the consent of the United States, a private person may not bring suit on such a bond.

The postmaster general may sue on bonds given by postmasters for the faithful discharge of the duties imposed on them by their office.<sup>92</sup> However, it is well settled that, in the absence of special statutory authorization, a private person cannot sue on a postmaster's bond payable to the United States for moneys coming into his hands in his official capacity and lost through his negligence or default.<sup>93</sup> Under such circumstances, the United States may sue for the benefit of the injured person and recover from the sureties on the official bond of the postmaster the full amount of the loss.<sup>94</sup>

(4) Pleading, Evidence, and Trial

The general rules of pleading, evidence, and trial in civil actions are applicable in an action on the bond of a postmaster.

General rules of pleading in civil actions, especially in actions on official bonds, ordinarily apply in actions on bonds of postmasters.<sup>95</sup> A petition in a suit against a postmaster for breach of his bond which alleges the time, manner, and substance of the breach sufficiently to enable him to defend is sufficient as against him.<sup>96</sup> In an action on a postmaster's bond for loss by theft of government money from a registered package, a complaint alleging that the loss was due to the postmaster's negligence and disregard of postal laws and regulations, in failing to use ordinary care to protect the package, although subject to motion to make more definite, is sufficient as against a general demurrer.<sup>97</sup> In an action to recover the value of registered mail negligently lost by him, brought by the United States for the benefit of the injured person, it is not necessary to allege that the suit is brought for his benefit, but it will be sufficient that the facts stated in the complaint show that such is the case.<sup>98</sup>

General rules as to issues, proof, and variance, especially in actions on other officers' bonds, apply in actions on postmasters' bonds.<sup>99</sup>

Evidence. In actions on postmasters' bonds the general rules in civil actions ordinarily apply with

§ 9. Deputy and Assistant Postmasters

The office of assistant postmaster is recognized by law, and he, together with the sureties on his bond, ordinarily is liable for losses and injuries caused by his own defaults or negligence.

The office of assistant postmaster is recognized by law, and appropriations are made by congress for paying such officers.<sup>6</sup> An assistant postmaster can be removed by that authority only in which by law the power of appointment is vested.<sup>7</sup>

Liability of deputy or assistant postmasters. It is very generally held that deputy or assistant postmasters are liable for losses and injuries caused by their own defaults or negligence.<sup>8</sup> However, it has also been held that in order to render this rule applicable it is essential that they should be duly appointed officers of the department recognized by law<sup>9</sup> and that one who is not authorized to act as deputy by any regular appointment or authority but was merely occasionally employed and allowed by the postmaster to act in the office as an assistant or servant in receiving and delivering letters should not be held liable for a loss, although occasioned solely by his own default.<sup>10</sup>

Bond and liability thereon. Assistant postmasters are required by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 132, to give bond to the United States<sup>11</sup> and, as a measure of self-protection, a postmaster may exact a bond from his deputy.<sup>12</sup>

A postmaster who has repaid to the United States post office funds embezzled by an assistant postmaster cannot maintain an action against the assistant and a bonding company which has given security to the United States for the faithful performance of his duty by the assistant for the purpose of recovering the deficit, since the bond was given to, and for the protection of, the United States only.<sup>13</sup> Furthermore, the government as obligee of a deputy postmaster's bond may not maintain an action on the bond for the benefit of the postmaster who voluntarily has paid to the government the shortages of his deputy.<sup>14</sup> Where, however, the bond is given to the postmaster instead of to the United States, it has been held that a complaint in an action by the postmaster against the assistant and sureties on his bond which alleges that the assistant postmaster had neglected actually and faithfully to account for stamps, moneys, and mail matter turned over to him by the postmaster and stating the amount of the shortage, sufficiently alleges a breach of the bond without an allegation of the assistant's negligence.<sup>15</sup> Neither the negligence or carelessness of a postmaster, obligee in a bond given by an assistant postmaster, nor the incompetence of the principal in the bond constitutes a defense to an action on the bond for loss occasioned by the principal's failure to account for funds coming into his hands.<sup>16</sup>

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 40, prescribing a three-year limitation for suits against sureties on a postmaster's bond has no application to actions against sureties on a bond given to the postmaster by his assistant.<sup>17</sup>

§ 10. Clerks or Employees in Post Office

- a. In general
- b. Compensation and fines
- c. Liability

a. In General

Provision is made by the statutes for the appointment of post office clerks and employees who may be required to give bond.

Provision is made by the statutes for the appointment of clerks and employees in post offices,<sup>18</sup> and they may be required by the postmaster general under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 132, to give bond to the United States conditioned for the faithful discharge of all duties and trusts imposed on them either by law or by the rules and regulations of the post office department.<sup>19</sup> A new bond may be substituted under the procedure stated in the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 815;<sup>20</sup> and under the amendment to 6 U.S.C.A. § 3 the payment and acceptance of the annual premium on corporate surety bonds furnished by postal employees are a compliance with the statute requiring the renewal of bonds of federal officers every four years after their dates.<sup>21</sup>

Removal and retirement. Postal clerks and employees are removable in such manner as the law provides, and, where they are in the classified civil service, they may be dismissed for such cause and in such manner as the statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 652, provides.<sup>22</sup>

Postal clerks and employees within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 691 et seq, may retire or be retired in accordance with its provisions.<sup>23</sup>

b. Compensation and Fines

A post office clerk or employee is entitled to such compensation as is fixed by law.

A clerk or employee in a post office is entitled to such compensation as is provided for by law.<sup>24</sup> Statutes which in terms "authorize" the postmaster general to classify and fix the salaries of clerks and employees of post offices do not confer a mere discretionary power but are held to impose a duty or obligation to classify and fix such salaries in the manner prescribed by the statute.<sup>25</sup>

The official position of a clerk or employee in a post office and the amount of his salary must be determined by the roster of the office approved by the postmaster general,<sup>26</sup> and, where he is borne on the roster as occupying a designated position, he can recover only the salary attached to that position, although he in fact performs the duties of a position to which a higher salary is attached.<sup>27</sup> So it has been held that, where a postal clerk is lawfully employed in work that is not inconsistent with his general business under his general employment as a postal clerk, he remains a postal clerk, and is entitled only to compensation as such.<sup>28</sup>

The time spent by a local post office clerk outside of office hours in preparation for an examination required by the post office department is not overtime work for which the clerk may recover extra compensation.<sup>29</sup>

Conduct tending to disrupt service
Publication in newspapers of false reports that post office clerks were discriminated against and in some instances dismissed because of union activities, for purpose of intimidation or bringing pressure to bear on officials whose duty it was to preserve efficiency of service, would constitute conduct tending to disrupt service for which clerk participating therein could be dismissed.—Levine v. Farley, supra.

Discretion of administrative officers

Where the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 691 et seq, have been complied with and the rights of plaintiff have been fully exercised, his reduction in grade and retirement were matters solely within the discretion of the authorized administrative officers.—Bennett v. U. S., 89 Ct.Cl. 322.

Disposition of retirement fund of deceased employee

Under statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 724 (d), providing that money payable from retirement fund of federal postal system may be paid to an administratrix, it is implied that administration expenses should be payable out of the fund, and that such payment is not prohibited by statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 729, providing that money payable from retirement fund shall not be assignable or subject to legal process.—In re Holder's Estate, 35 N.Y.S.2d 1020, 264 App.Div. 898.

29. U.S.—Deland v. U. S., 77 Ct.Cl. 55.

Insufficient appropriation. Where by statute an appropriation has been made for the hire of temporary and auxiliary clerks for a fiscal year, the postmaster general is not justified in incurring a deficiency in respect of their employment, although the failure to incur the deficiency will seriously cripple the service.<sup>30</sup> The authority to employ temporary and auxiliary clerks is dependent entirely on an appropriation for that purpose, in view of a statute providing that no executive department shall expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of the appropriations made by congress for that fiscal year.<sup>31</sup>

Fines. A statute giving the postmaster general authority to fix the salary of post office clerks confers no authority on him to impose fines and enforce their collection from such salaries,<sup>32</sup> and fines imposed under invalid regulations providing for the imposition thereof may be recovered back.<sup>33</sup> It is of no consequence whether or not the clerk on whom the fine was imposed had notice of the regulation, since a departmental regulation contrary to law is no regulation.<sup>34</sup>

c. Liability

- (1) In general
- (2) Liability on bond

(1) In General

In discharging their duties, postal clerks are bound to use only such care and diligence as a prudent man exercises in his own affairs.

Postal clerks are bound to use only such care and diligence in the discharge of their duties as a prudent man exercises in his own affairs.<sup>35</sup> However, where a clerk received a letter containing money to be sent by mail as a registered letter under a mutually mistaken belief that letters could be registered to the place to which it was addressed, and then on discovering the mistake without authority from the sender of the letter sent it by mail unregistered by direction of his superior officer, and it was lost, both he and the superior officer are liable to the sender for its value.<sup>36</sup>

(2) Liability on Bond

The sureties on the bond of a post office clerk or employee are liable within the penalty of the bond for the loss sustained by the government because of the default of the principal.

The sureties on the bond of a clerk or employee in a post office are liable under the terms of the bond for the default of the principal.<sup>37</sup> The liability of the sureties continues for a default of the principal whether or not a renewal premium is paid for a later year.<sup>38</sup> Where the bond is conditioned on the faithful discharge of the duties and trusts imposed and for the accounting of all moneys, mail matter, and other property which shall come into the hands of the postal clerk or employee, the sureties on a clerk's bond are not liable for funds which never came into the hands of the clerk, but which came into the hands of another postal clerk.<sup>39</sup>

Amount recoverable. The government may recover the loss sustained within the amount of the penalty fixed by the bond.<sup>40</sup> In the absence of proof of special damages, the recovery is necessarily remitted to a nominal amount in order to carry costs in favor of the United States.<sup>41</sup>

Where a post office clerk or employee embezzles money contained in a registered letter or package, the United States may recover on his official bond the full amount lost if it is not in excess of the penalty of the bond, although it is only responsible in case of the loss of a registered letter

Clerk in postal contract station Where a drugstore company's officer was a postal clerk in charge of a postal contract station located in the drugstore, but he took no active part in the conduct of the station and received none of the funds embezzled by another person appointed postal clerk at the station, the sureties on the bond of the drugstore company's officer were not liable.—U. S. v. Adamo, C.C.A.Mass., 54 F.2d 764.

40. Penalty as cumulative or continuous

Under surety bond conditioned upon faithful performance of duties by a postal employee, where bond had no stated period of duration, was renewed annually by payment of premiums and did not contain express limiting provisions, penalty of bond was cumulative rather than merely continuous, irrespective of facts that premium was paid by employee, that bond was required as condition of employment, and that bond was on a government form, and hence where embezzlements had occurred in a number of successive years before discovery, government was entitled to recover an amount up to the penal sum of the bond, for each year in which defalcations occurred.—U. S. v. American Sur. Co. of N. Y., C.A.Conn., 172 F.2d 135, certiorari denied 69 S.Ct. 1494, 337 U.S. 930, 93 L.Ed. 1737.

or package for an amount not exceeding fifty dollars.<sup>42</sup> When recovery has been had by the United States, it holds the amount recovered above the amount it has paid on a trust for the benefit of those injured,<sup>43</sup> and the money will be paid over to those entitled thereto.<sup>44</sup>

Apportionment of loss. Where the bond makes no provision for apportionment of loss and there was no such identity between a company which insured the safe transmission of the registered package stolen and defendant which insured the conduct of the postal employee as to risk or subject matter, as would warrant the right to contribution, there can be no apportionment of loss.<sup>45</sup>

Proceedings to enforce liability. The enforcement of bonds of clerks and employees in post offices is governed ordinarily by the rules governing the enforcement of bonds of other officers and especially bonds of federal officers.<sup>46</sup> Where an insurer of the safe transmission of registered packages indemnified the senders, the packages having been stolen by a post office employee, and the United States for the benefit of the senders and insurer sued on the bond of such employee, the questions as to which insurer's liability was primary are for determination by the chief postal inspector under statutes and postal laws and regulations, providing for forwarding of moneys recovered to the chief inspector and directing that he shall determine on satisfactory evidence the proper persons or owners to whom the money shall be restored, and such questions cannot be determined by the federal district court in an action on the post office employee's bond.<sup>47</sup>

§ 12. — In City Delivery Service

- a. In general
- b. Hours of work and compensation
- c. Duties and liabilities

a. In General

Letter carriers in city delivery service are appointed by the postmaster general and they are required to give bond.

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 151, letter carriers in city delivery service shall be employed for the free delivery of mail matter, as frequently as the public business may require.<sup>48</sup> The power to appoint letter carriers is vested in the postmaster general<sup>49</sup> and he alone has the power to appoint them.<sup>50</sup>

Bond. Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 157, every letter carrier shall give a bond with sureties, to be approved by the postmaster general, for the safe custody and delivery of all mail matter, and the faithful account and payment of all money received by him.<sup>51</sup>

Removal and suspension. Subject to the provisions of the classified civil service statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 652, providing for written charges, notice, and an opportunity to be heard,<sup>52</sup> incident to the power of appointment of letter carriers is the power of removal<sup>53</sup> or suspension.<sup>54</sup> The power to remove or suspend letter carriers is vested in the

Where, in an action to recover the penalty for breach of a bond given by a postal clerk, conditioned to discharge faithfully all the duties and trusts imposed on him, it is shown that he opened letters coming into his hands and stole the contents, it is no defense that the United States is not liable to the senders for the loss.—U. ### Effect of post-office rule

Although a rule obtained in the post office department which provided that no carrier should be removed except for cause and on written charges of which the carrier had full notice and an opportunity to make a defense, in the absence of some specific provision of law which gave a carrier a permanent place on the regular carrier roll, his removal from that roll was a matter beyond review by the courts, as by compelling payment of salary as though he had not been removed.—Dearie v. U. S., 36 Ct.Cl. 5—49 C.J. p 1148 note 90.

53. U.S.—Beuhring v. U. S., 45 Ct.Cl. 404.
49 C.J. p 1148 note 83.

54. U.S.—Beuhring v. U. S., supra.

postmaster general alone,<sup>55</sup> and a removal or suspension must be on the direct order of the postmaster general.<sup>56</sup> A postmaster has no authority to remove or suspend a carrier without the approval of the postmaster general,<sup>57</sup> the approval of the first assistant postmaster general being insufficient.<sup>58</sup> However, it has been held that a removal by the first assistant postmaster general, approved by the postmaster general, is valid and effective.<sup>59</sup>

Reinstatement. The resignation of a letter carrier and its acceptance constitutes such a separation from his position as is contemplated by a civil service rule governing reinstatement and providing for the reinstatement in the departments in which they formerly served of men separated without delinquencies or misconduct on their parts from competitive positions on certificates from the civil service commission.<sup>60</sup> However, under a civil service rule providing that any person who has been separated from the service by reason of a reduction of force specifically required by law may be reinstated without regard to the length of time he has been separated from the service, where certain carriers were separated from the service by the abolition of free delivery service at a designated town, by the postmaster general, acting in the exercise of his discretion, the former carriers are not entitled to be reinstated on the reestablishment of free delivery service in that town.<sup>61</sup>

Reduction of rating of letter carriers. The power conferred on the postmaster general to employ letter carriers includes, the power to reduce them to the list of substitutes,<sup>62</sup> and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, when a postmaster general takes action of this character, it must be assumed that his discretion was lawfully exercised.<sup>63</sup> Nevertheless, the only way in which the postmaster general can legally reduce a carrier from a higher

to a lower grade and thereby reduce his salary is to proceed in the manner set forth in the statutes governing the matter.<sup>64</sup> If the statutes require tests of the efficiency of the carriers before reducing their rating, the postmaster general is without authority arbitrarily to change the rating without any test of efficiency.<sup>65</sup>

Retirement. Letter carriers within the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, 5 U.S.C.A. § 691 et seq, may retire or be retired in accordance with its provisions.<sup>66</sup> Under the statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 724, on separation from the service under the conditions specified, a letter carrier is entitled to a refund of moneys withheld from his salary for pension purposes.<sup>67</sup> An action to recover the refund may be maintained by the letter carrier<sup>68</sup> and he is not required first to exhaust remedies before the civil service commission.<sup>69</sup> In such action the government may counterclaim for losses sustained by reason of the conduct of the letter carrier.<sup>70</sup> General rules ordinarily are applicable with respect to burden of proof<sup>71</sup> and the admissibility<sup>72</sup> and weight and sufficiency<sup>73</sup> of the evidence.

ing a day's work as fixed by the statute.<sup>75</sup> Under its provisions the carrier is entitled to eight hours' work and to his pay if work is not furnished to him.<sup>76</sup>

A delivery carrier's service may be made to begin when he arrives at the post office, and to end when he completes his delivery.<sup>77</sup> A collecting carrier's service may be made to begin when he reaches the first mail box on each tour, and to end when he delivers such mail matter at the post office.<sup>78</sup>

As a substitute. Where a letter carrier accepts the terms of an order which takes his name from the roll of regular letter carriers and places it on the roll of substitutes, without objection or protest, he thereby assents to the arrangement, and cannot recover the compensation of a regular carrier while paid for his services as a substitute.<sup>79</sup> He must stand on the kind of service which he agreed to enter and for which he had been compensated.<sup>80</sup> So a substitute cannot recover for the time when he is required to report and hold himself in readiness for assignment to service,<sup>81</sup> or for the time spent by him in qualifying himself to perform the service when the regular letter carrier ceases to perform it.<sup>82</sup>

During suspension. When a letter carrier is suspended, nothing being said as to deprivation of pay, and is afterward restored to duty, he is entitled to his pay during the period of suspension.<sup>83</sup> In order to deprive him of his statutory compensation two things, it is said, are essential: That the power so to do must be lodged directly, or by necessary implication, in some official hand;<sup>84</sup> and that the power must be exercised actually and expressly, and not indirectly or by implication.<sup>85</sup>

(2) Extra Service

If emergencies or the needs of the service require it, a letter carrier may be employed in excess of eight hours per day and receive overtime pay.

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 854, if emergencies or the needs of the service require it, a letter carrier may be employed in excess of eight hours per day and receive overtime pay.<sup>86</sup>

It has been said, however, that the statute does not authorize a postmaster to employ a letter carrier to work more than eight hours a day except where it may be required by the public service.<sup>87</sup> In order to entitle carriers to extra pay, they must be actually "employed," that is to say, actually engaged in performing services for the post office,<sup>88</sup> and the employment must be for the benefit of the government,<sup>89</sup> and not for the convenience of the carrier.<sup>90</sup>

The services must be performed with the knowledge and consent of the postmaster,<sup>91</sup> because otherwise the government would not be a party to any contract of employment therefor.<sup>92</sup> However, letter carriers will be considered as "employed" within the meaning of the act, and entitled to extra pay, either where the postmaster requests or directs the services to be performed<sup>93</sup> or where in good faith they perform postal duties more than eight hours a day with the knowledge and consent of the postmaster.<sup>94</sup> While subordinates have no authority to require overtime from letter carriers without the consent of the postmaster,<sup>95</sup> when overtime has been necessarily made under the supervision of subordinates who report the fact to the postmaster and he takes no steps to check or otherwise regulate such overtime, his consent thereto must be presumed.<sup>96</sup> So it has been held that, where extra services are performed at the request of the postmaster, the carrier will be entitled to extra pay, although the postmaster understood that the services were to be voluntary<sup>97</sup> or although he forbade the carriers to register overtime,<sup>98</sup> since he is without power to require actual services without compensation contrary to the intent of the statute.<sup>99</sup>

99. U.S.—Laurey v. U. S., supra.

Character of employment. Where the statute does not specify how the carrier must be employed, or of what such employment is to consist, in order to entitle him to extra pay, it is necessary only that he should be a letter carrier and be lawfully employed in work that is not inconsistent with his general business under his employment as a letter carrier.<sup>2</sup> A claim for extra services and pay may include an employment of a letter carrier, not only in the delivery and collection of mail matter,<sup>3</sup> but also for work done in the post office during the intervals between trips for delivering and collecting mail matter, which is authorized by the postal regulations and required by the postmaster.<sup>4</sup>

Set-off against claim for overtime. Under the provisions of the statute, if a letter carrier is employed in excess of eight hours on any day during the month he is entitled to extra pay therefor, although during the residue of the month he may have worked less than eight hours each day.<sup>5</sup> The government cannot set off against a claim for extra hours' work on certain days a deficit of hours occurring because the carrier worked less than eight hours on Sundays and legal holidays.<sup>6</sup> The only set-off that can be maintained is when the carrier is absent from duty without leave.<sup>7</sup>

Substitute carriers. Where the statute is, in terms, limited to letter carriers, it does not authorize the giving of extra pay to substitute letter carriers for work in excess of eight hours.<sup>8</sup>

Waiver. The compensation of a letter carrier for services in excess of eight hours a day is fixed by statute, and not by contract, and a postmaster has no authority to increase or diminish it, or to take it away, even though the carrier consents to serve without compensation.<sup>9</sup>

c. Duties and Liabilities

A letter carrier has regularly prescribed duties to perform, and the sureties on his bond are liable for such defaults of the carrier as are covered by the bond.

A letter carrier has regularly prescribed duties to perform.<sup>10</sup> The duty of collecting letters and packages to be registered, imposed on letter carriers by the order of the postmaster general, is within the scope of the office of the letter carrier, and germane to the previous duties pertaining to it.<sup>11</sup>

Liability on bond. The bond of a letter carrier extends to and covers all duties prescribed by subsequent legislation or regulation of the same kind as those previously pertaining to the office, which are within its scope and naturally belong to its business.<sup>12</sup> The sureties on a carrier's bond are liable for his embezzlement of private funds collected by him for transmission to senders of C. O. D. parcels delivered by him,<sup>13</sup> and the United States may maintain an action against a surety for money embezzled by the carrier from registered letters, although the owners of the letters have made no claim against the government for indemnity and nothing has been paid to them.<sup>14</sup>

§ 13. — Rural Letter Carriers

Rural letter carriers may be appointed and required to give bond.

The postmaster general is authorized by law to appoint rural letter carriers.<sup>15</sup> Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 197, now superseded by 39 U.S.C.A. § 867, on the appointment of rural delivery carriers, the agents of the department estimate the length of the routes, and the carriers are assigned to the different classes accordingly.<sup>16</sup> Where a rural delivery route is found by actual measurement to be longer than its distance, estimated at the time of the carrier's appointment, the postmaster general may correct the error so as to bring the carrier into the class in which the distance traveled entitles him to be,<sup>17</sup> but the carrier cannot

§ 14. Railway Postal Clerks

The statutes make provision for railway postal clerks and their compensation.

The appointment of one as a railway postal clerk without a civil service examination at a time when such examination is not required by statute is valid,<sup>22</sup> although he does not take the oath of office and enter on his duties until after a date when a civil service examination is required as a preliminary to the making of an appointment.<sup>23</sup>

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 610, now superseded by 39 U.S.C.A. § 866, railway postal clerks were divided into two classes, and seven grades, and the salary for each grade was designated;<sup>24</sup> and, under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 618 a, commonly referred to as the Terminal Reclassification Act, provision is made for the terminal post office system, and the clerks in the terminal post offices shall be classified as railway postal clerks.<sup>25</sup>

§ 15. Mail Clerks of Armed Forces

Enlisted men of the armed forces may be selected as mail clerks in their respective services and required to give bond.

Under the statutes, 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 134, 135, 138, enlisted men of the United States Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Army may be selected as mail clerks and required to take the oath of office and give a bond to the United States.<sup>26</sup>

§ 16. Post Office Inspectors

The postmaster general has statutory authority to appoint post office inspectors.

Provision is made by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 692, for the appointment of post office inspectors by the postmaster general.<sup>27</sup> Under regulations of the post office department so providing, a post office inspector cannot recover pay for such time as he was excused from performing the duties of his office by reason of sickness,<sup>28</sup> although there is no express statutory authority for the regulation.<sup>29</sup>

§ 17. Postal Revenues, Property, Funds, and Accounts

Postal receipts, including fees from the money order business, may be deposited in federal reserve banks, or in their member banks, as revenue of the government.

Post office money order funds are part of the public moneys of the United States.<sup>30</sup> Under the statute, 12 U.S.C.A. § 391, providing that the "revenue" of the government, or any part thereof, "may" be deposited in federal reserve banks, it has been held that all postal receipts, including fees only from the money order business, are "revenues of the Government" within the meaning of this provision, and may be deposited in federal reserve banks or in their member banks.<sup>31</sup> The statute relating to "revenues," it has been said, is permissive as to deposits in federal reserve banks.<sup>32</sup>

It has been held that the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 47, providing that any postmaster having public money belonging to the government at an office in a city or town where there is no designated depository may deposit it at his own risk and in his official capacity in any national or state bank in the city in which the postmaster resides, does not deprive the United States of any rights or interest in cashier's checks and drafts purchased by the postmaster in his official capacity from public money received in operation of the post office in view of a further provision that postmasters shall keep safely, without loaning, using, depositing in any unauthorized bank, or exchanging for other funds all the public money collected by them, or which may come into their hands.<sup>33</sup> A deposit of post-office receipts in the joint name of the postmaster and his assistant does not make them jointly responsible therefor to the government.<sup>34</sup>

Under the provisions of a statute, 31 U.S.C.A. § 73, now repealed and covered by 39 U.S.C.A. §§ 794-794 f, all accounts of the post office, in common with other public accounts, were to be adjusted quarterly, with such vouchers as the postmaster general might prescribe.<sup>35</sup> The auditor of the treasury for the post office department was regarded as the custodian of all accounts arising in the post office department or relative thereto, with the vouchers necessary to a correct adjustment thereof, this custody being subject, however, to the control of the postmaster general.<sup>36</sup> These accounts were to be regarded as papers in the treasury department within a statute providing that the court of claims should have power to call on any department for any information or papers which may be necessary.<sup>37</sup>

§ 18. Contracts for Post Office Supplies

Contracts for supplies for the post office department shall be made by the postmaster general in his name.

Under the statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 366, as amended contracts for supplies for the post office department shall be made by the postmaster general in his name subject to his approval.<sup>38</sup> The power to make contracts for supplies for the post office department is subject to the condition that congress has made an appropriation to pay for the supplies.<sup>39</sup>

Advertisements and persons with whom contract made. It has been provided by statute, 41 U.S.C.A. § 5, that all contracts for supplies in any of the departments of the government shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals with respect thereto when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or the immediate performance of the services,<sup>40</sup> and, prior to its amendment the statute, 5 U.S.C.A. § 366, provided that the purchasing agent in making purchases of supplies necessary for the post office department should advertise as provided by law and award contracts for such supplies to the lowest responsible bidder in pursuance of existing law.<sup>41</sup> These statutes are broad enough to prohibit the renewal or extension of a contract at the pleasure of the postmaster general without advertisement.<sup>42</sup>

It is competent for the postmaster general in advertising for proposals for furnishing the post-office department with supplies to reserve "the right to reject any and all bids, if in his judgment the interests of the government required it" and

Prior to the amendment of the

Under the statute responsibility rested on the postmaster general.—Thomson v. U. S., 37 App.D.C. 461.

to act on such reservation.<sup>43</sup> Where there is no express provision as to the persons with whom the department shall contract or to whom proposals shall be addressed by advertising, the advertisements for bids may be limited to those only who are able to do the work or furnish the supplies needed by the department;<sup>44</sup> and in the absence of any statutory prohibition the postmaster general may award a contract for furnishing supplies to a firm, it being the lowest bidder, one of the members of which is an officer of the department.<sup>45</sup> So, also, it has been held that a statute, prohibiting employees of the post-office department from becoming interested in mail contracts or acting as agents for mail contractors, does not forbid an employee from supplying it at agreed rates with any device or improvement invented and patented by him that may be useful or convenient in the postal service.<sup>46</sup>

Bids. Where the advertisement requires the proposals to be made on blank forms furnished by the department, the omission or erasure of immaterial words in the proposal of a bidder does not affect the validity of his bid.<sup>47</sup> An award of contract, by the issuance of an order of the postmaster general in the usual way and its transmittal to the bidder, thus indicating the acceptance of his proposal, is sufficient, and, when received by the latter, the award thus made is beyond recall, and the agreement is complete and binding on the government.<sup>48</sup>

Construction and operation of contract. Rules applicable to the construction and operation of contracts generally apply to contracts for the furnishing of supplies to the post office department.<sup>49</sup>

Congress has divided mailable matter into four classes.<sup>51</sup> The four classes of mailable matter are generally described by objective standards which refer in part to their contents but not to the quality of their contents,<sup>52</sup> and congress has not committed to the postmaster general or to anyone else the matter of determining what should be carried in the mails as matter of one class and what as matter of another class, but has reserved to itself that power exclusively, itself making the classification.<sup>53</sup> The postmaster general and his subordinates are required to use judgment and discretion, and it may sometimes be a matter of much difficulty to identify a publication as one included in the category prescribed by congress;<sup>54</sup> but their discretion is limited to this question of identification;<sup>55</sup> and it is not competent for the postmaster general and his subordinates to add anything to the statute or take any-

(1) In General

Mailable matter of the second class embraces all newspapers or other periodical publications issued at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year if they are within the conditions named in other statutory provisions relating to matter of this class.

Under statutory provisions, 39 U.S.C.A. § 224, mailable matter of the second class embraces all newspapers or other periodical publications issued at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year if they are within the conditions named in other statutory provisions relating to matter of this class.<sup>59</sup> The second-class privilege is a form of subsidy,<sup>60</sup> and the rates prescribed for this class of matter, which are much lower than those prescribed for other classes of mail matter, and the resulting pecuniary advantages to the publishers of newspapers and periodicals taken in connection with the exceptional administrative and other privileges accorded them undoubtedly work a very great discrimination in their favor;<sup>61</sup> but these rates are granted periodicals meeting the requirements of the statute to encourage the distribution of periodicals which disseminate the particular information required by the statute so that the public good may be served,<sup>62</sup> and the validity of legislation of this character is upheld on the ground that its purpose is to secure to the public the benefits to result from "the wide dissemination of intelligence as to current events."<sup>63</sup> The second-class privilege is granted only on the application of a publisher for entry of his publication to that class.<sup>64</sup> On such an application a searching investigation of the character of the publication is made by the postmaster general under rules and regulations prescribed by him,<sup>65</sup> although such rules or regulations cannot add anything to the characteristics required by statutory provisions,<sup>66</sup> and, if the publication is found to be entitled to the second-class privilege, a permit to that effect is issued.<sup>67</sup> A person who fully and fairly complies with all the requirements of the statute with respect to the admission of a publication to the mails as second-class matter acquires a positive legal right to have it so carried.<sup>68</sup>

Periodical publications. By the express provisions of the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 224, in order to entitle a publication to second-class postage rates, it must be a "periodical publication,"<sup>69</sup> and the terms "periodicals" and "periodical publications" are synonymous.<sup>70</sup> The requirement that mail matter of the second class shall be a "periodical publication"

"Periodical" means that it must be like a newspaper printed at given periods or not less than four times a year.—Esquire, Inc. v. Walker, D.C.D.C., 55 F.Supp. 1015, reversed on other grounds 151 F.2d 49, 80 U.S. App.D.C. 145, affirmed 66 S.Ct. 456, 327 U.S. 146, 90 L.Ed. 586.

means that it shall not only have the feature of periodicity, but that it shall be a periodical in the ordinary sense of the term,<sup>71</sup> and, although it complies in all respects with other conditions imposed by statute as a prerequisite to the transmission of mail as matter of the second class, as discussed infra subdivision c (2) of this section, it will not be considered a "periodical publication" unless it is a periodical publication in the ordinary sense of the term.<sup>72</sup>

Publications issued by institutions of learning. Within the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 229, providing that periodical publications issued by regularly incorporated institutions of learning shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter, institutions of learning are those organizations of a permanent nature, wherein instruction is given in the higher branches of education only, and which owe their origin to private or public munificence, and are established solely for the public good and not for private gain.<sup>73</sup> An incorporated educational institution conducting a correspondence college for the gain and profit of its stockholders is not a regularly incorporated institution of learning.<sup>74</sup>

Magazine issued with newspaper. The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 228, providing that publishers of matter of the second class may, without subjecting it to extra postage, fold within their regular issues a supplement, the matter of which must be germane to the publication which it supplements, has no application to a magazine issued with a newspaper which is a separate and distinct periodical having no connection whatever with the newspaper either in its physical form or in the nature of its contents.<sup>75</sup> Such magazine and paper are, however, entitled to second-class rates of postage under the provisions of the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 224, as being a publication "issued at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year."<sup>76</sup>

mailing at the second-class rates to the extent of ten per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year, prior to the enactment of this statute postal regulations limiting the amount of sample copies had been held valid,<sup>77</sup> although there was some authority to the contrary.<sup>78</sup>

Examination of second-class mail. Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 225, providing that matter of the second class may be examined at the office of mailing, and, if found to contain matter which is subject to a higher rate of postage, the higher rate of postage shall be charged, it has been stated that such provision means more than examining the bundle or wrapper, but means an examination of the contents of the printed matter.<sup>79</sup>

(2) Conditions Admitting Publications to Second Class

The statute specifies four conditions on which a publication, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be admitted to the second class, but it does not specify that they shall be the only requisites.

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 226, specifies four conditions on which a publication, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be admitted to the second class,<sup>80</sup> but it does not declare that they shall be the only requisites.<sup>81</sup>

The first condition is that it must regularly be issued at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.<sup>82</sup> However, this condition is limited by the express provision of statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 224, that the publication must be a periodical publication, as discussed supra subsection (1) of this subdivision, and, accordingly, it has been held that books complete in themselves and which have no connection with each other are not entitled to be classified as second-class mail matter merely because, in compliance with the statutory requirements, they are serially issued at stated intervals more than four times a year, bear dates of issue, and are numbered consecutively;<sup>83</sup> and the postmaster general can exclude them from second-class mail notwithstanding they have been heretofore transmitted as such by his predecessors in office.<sup>84</sup>

The second condition is that the publication must be issued from a known office of publication.<sup>85</sup> Under this condition, the fact that the magazine part of the publication is edited and printed in one place, and the newspaper in another, is not material, if they are both issued from the same place.<sup>86</sup>

The third condition is that it must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguished printed books for preservation from periodical publications.<sup>87</sup> Under this condition the fact that a publication, having the characteristics of a book, is not bound when issued, or intended for preservation, is immaterial,<sup>88</sup> as it is not to be inferred from this condition that in order to constitute a book the publication must have a substantial binding.<sup>89</sup>

The fourth condition is that it must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and must have a legitimate list of subscribers.<sup>90</sup> A "legitimate list of subscribers" within this condition means a list of subscribers taken at more than a nominal price, and that the price must have been paid by the subscriber or some one in his behalf or under obligation to pay the price,<sup>91</sup> and subscriptions taken at a nominal price or without price do not answer the requirements of the statute in that particular and may not be counted in making up a legitimate list.<sup>92</sup> The condition that it must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character or devoted to literature, sciences, or arts, or some special industry supplies the standards which relate to the format of the publication and to the nature of its contents,<sup>93</sup> but not to their quality, worth, or value.<sup>94</sup> Accordingly, the words "literature" or "arts" mean no more than productions which convey ideas by words, pictures, or drawings.<sup>95</sup> Thus, the postmaster general does not have discretion to deny periodicals the second-class rate if in his view they do not contribute to the public good,<sup>96</sup> and has no power to prescribe the standard for literature or art which a mailable periodical disseminates,<sup>97</sup> since such a power would constitute a power of censorship which is so abhorrent to tradition that a purpose to grant it should not be easily inferred.<sup>98</sup> Therefore, the postmaster general has the power to determine whether a periodical which is mailable contains information of a public character, literature, or art,<sup>99</sup> but not the power to determine whether the contents meet some standard of the public good or welfare.<sup>1</sup>

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 226, also provides that regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates, shall not be admitted to the second-class rate, and the word "primarily" means "chiefly" or "principally;"<sup>2</sup> and the words "regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes" mean publications chiefly or principally designed for advertising purposes.<sup>3</sup> A newspaper otherwise entitled to be admitted to the second class would violate the law by mailing under the second-class rate only where the papers mailed are designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates.<sup>4</sup> Whether or not the chief or principal design of any publication is for such purposes is a question of fact which must be determined by the postmaster general in each individual case from the evidence he may be able to obtain.<sup>5</sup>

(3) Conditions Imposed on Admission to Second Class

Statutes requiring the filing and publishing of certain sworn statements of ownership, etc., and the marking of matter as "advertisements," are intended merely to supplement existing legislation relative to second-class matter.

The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 233, requiring the filing and publishing of certain sworn statements of ownership, etc., and the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 234, requiring the marking of matter as "advertisements" were intended merely to supplement existing legislation relative to second-class mail matter, and to impose additional conditions for admission to the privileged class of mail,<sup>6</sup> and were not enacted as an exercise of legislative power to regulate the press or curtail its freedom.<sup>7</sup> The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 233, requiring statement of ownership, etc., it has been said, applies only to such publications as are regularly entered as second-class mail matter;<sup>8</sup> and the statement of circulation should cover the whole bona fide paid circulation, however attained, whether sold over the counter, distributed through news agencies and news routes, or disposed of in any other way.<sup>9</sup>

(4) Suspension or Revocation of Second-Class Mail Privileges Generally

(a) Power to suspend or revoke

(b) Hearing

(a) Power to Suspend or Revoke

The power to suspend or revoke admission to the privilege of second-class mail is a necessary incident to the power to grant it.

The power to suspend or revoke admission to the privilege of second-class mail is a necessary incident to the power to grant it;<sup>10</sup> and this power is recognized by statute, the constitutionality of which has been upheld.<sup>11</sup> A permit issued by the post office department permitting certain publications to the privilege of second-class mail matter, which by its own terms continues in effect until revoked, is a mere license,<sup>12</sup> and the postmaster general is not bound by the construction placed by a predecessor in office on the statute relating to second-class mail matter, so as to preclude him from revoking such a certificate which had been issued by such predecessor, where no vested right has been created by such certificate.<sup>13</sup> Furthermore, in order to authorize a revocation of admission of a publication to the privilege of second-class mail matter, it is not necessary that the permit should contain a specific reservation of the right to revoke.<sup>14</sup> However, an order revoking a second-class mailing permit for failure to comply with the fourth condition of the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 226, because the publication does not contribute to the public good, has been held invalid,<sup>15</sup> since the postmaster general does not have discretion to deny periodicals the second-class rate if in his view they do not contribute to the public good, as discussed supra c (2) of this section.

(b) Hearing

When a publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges, the permit may not be suspended or revoked until a hearing shall have been granted to the persons interested.

Under statutory provisions, 39 U.S.C.A. § 232, when a publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges, the permit may not be suspended or revoked until a hearing shall have been granted to the persons interested.<sup>16</sup> However, where a temporary permit is issued according second-class mail privileges to a publication until the post office department shall determine whether it is admissible as second-class mail matter, and the department for several years delays action on the publisher's application for second-class mail privileges, this does not entitle him to a hearing on his application before the department acts as in case of a revocation of a privilege once granted.<sup>17</sup> A notice that at a certain time and place publishers will be given a hearing to show cause why their second-class permit should not be revoked on grounds designated in the notice is sufficiently specific,<sup>18</sup> and hearings to determine whether permits admitting to second-class mail privileges shall be revoked are necessarily more informal than judicial hearings, and no fixed or arbitrary rules can be laid down as to whether a sufficient hearing has been given.<sup>19</sup> The only duty of the officer at the hearing is to hear, and, if the interested parties are given a chance to offer evidence, they are not denied a hearing within the meaning of this statute.<sup>20</sup>

(5) Review by Courts

The decision of the postmaster general refusing to admit matter to the mails as second-class matter or revoking an order granting the privilege calls for the exercise of judgment and discretion on the part of the postmaster general, and is entitled to great weight, and, unless clearly erroneous, it will not be disturbed.

The decision of the postmaster general refusing to admit matter to the mails as second-class matter or revoking an order granting that privilege calls for the exercise of judgment and discretion on the part of the postmaster general<sup>21</sup> and is entitled to great weight,<sup>22</sup> and, unless clearly erroneous, it will not be disturbed.<sup>23</sup> Nevertheless, the courts have the power to review orders of this kind<sup>24</sup> and will do so where the order is clearly erroneous<sup>25</sup> or where the postmaster general acted without authority of law or in excess of the power granted him.<sup>26</sup> The general question of the extent and limitations of the judicial power to supervise the determination of the postmaster general with respect to the admission of publications to carriage in the mails at second-class rates is not affected by differences in the form of relief sought, whether mandamus in one case or injunction in another,<sup>27</sup> except that greater circumspection should be exercised where the remedy sought is injunction, which may have a continued mandatory operation.<sup>28</sup>

leges. Where, on application for second-class mail privileges, a temporary permit is granted until the post office department shall determine whether the publication is admissible as second-class mail matter, the fact that the department delays for several years to take final action on the application for the privilege does not give the courts authority to review the action of the postmaster general in refusing to grant a hearing before the department acts on the application, as in the case of revocation of a privilege once granted.<sup>29</sup>

d. Third-Class Matter

Mailable matter of the third class includes books, circulars, and other matter wholly in print, except newspapers and other periodicals entered as second-class matter, proof sheets, corrected proof sheets, and manuscript copy accompanying them, merchandise, including farm and factory products, and all other mailable matter not included in the first, second, or fourth classes.

Under statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 235, mailable matter of the third class includes books, circulars, and other matter wholly in print, except newspapers and other periodicals entered as second-class matter, proof sheets, corrected proof sheets, and manuscript copy accompanying them, merchandise, including farm and factory products, and all other mailable matter not included in the first, second, or fourth classes.<sup>30</sup> Books, being expressly classified as third-class matter and so made liable to a higher rate of postage than second-class matter, cannot be removed from the third class and brought into the second by the simple device of publishing them in a series at regular intervals of time,<sup>31</sup> and this is so whether such publications are reprints of well-known works or new matter,<sup>32</sup> and although every publication devotes a few pages to matters relating to its circulation and to questions and answers relating to athletics.<sup>33</sup>

e. Fourth-Class Matter

Mailable matter of the fourth class includes mail matter in excess of a certain weight, and includes books, and all other mailable matter not included in the first, second, or third classes.

Under statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 240, mailable matter of the fourth class includes mail matter in excess of a certain weight, and includes books, and all other mailable matter not included in the first, second, or third classes.<sup>34</sup>

§ 21. — Exclusion of Matter from Mails

- a. In general
- b. Constitutionality of statutes
- c. Particular classes of matter excluded from mails
- d. Determination as to mailability and review

a. In General

Constitutional power of congress to establish post offices and post roads includes, as a necessary incident, the right to determine what may be carried in the mails and what shall not be carried.

Since the constitutional power of congress to establish post offices and post roads embraces the regulation of the entire postal system, as discussed supra § 2, it includes, as a necessary incident, the right to determine what may be carried in the mails and what shall not be so carried,<sup>35</sup> and to prescribe the size, weight, shape, and character of the contents of every mailable package, and limit the superscription,<sup>36</sup> and impose penalties for the violation of its regulations to be enforced through the courts.<sup>37</sup> Thus, the power of congress over the mails is not limited to the protection of the facilities of the mails,<sup>38</sup> but may be exercised to prevent the use of the mails for purposes which it deems objectionable to sound public policy,<sup>39</sup> or injurious to the public morals,<sup>40</sup> or inimical to the general welfare.<sup>41</sup> Hence, congress may enact reasonable regulations to prevent the mails from being used as instruments of fraud and imposition.<sup>42</sup> The use of the postal service is not a matter of right, but of privilege, limited by the statutes declaring certain classes of matter to be nonmailable,<sup>43</sup> and, when congress lays down a valid regulation pertinent to the use of the mails, it may withdraw the privilege of that use from those who disobey.<sup>44</sup> It has been said that it is doubtless within the power of the government to withdraw or discontinue its postal system entirely.<sup>45</sup>

Enforcement. In the enforcement of regulations excluding matter from the mail, a distinction is to be made between what is intended to be kept free from inspection, such as letters, and sealed packages subject to letter postage, and what is open to inspection, such as newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter, purposely left in a condition to be examined.<sup>46</sup> Regulations with respect to printed matter open to examination in some cases

Effect of proprietary interest

The power probably may be regarded as even more comprehensive than that exercised over interstate commerce, since the government's interest in the mails is proprietary as well as regulatory.—Electric Bond & Share Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 580, affirmed 58 S.Ct. 678, 303 U.S. 419, 82 L.Ed. 936, 115 A.L.R. 105.

Conformity to postal laws and regulations is required of publishers seeking privilege of sending publication through mails.—Gitlow v. Kieley, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 227, affirmed, C.C.A., 49 F.2d 1077, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 29, 284 U.S. 648, 76 L.Ed. 550.

Not special privilege

Mail service is not a special privilege, but is a highway over which all business must travel.—Esquire, Inc., v. Walker, 151 F.2d 49, 180 U.S. App.D.C. 145, affirmed Hannegan v. Esquire, Inc., 66 S.Ct. 456, 327 U.S. 146, 90 L.Ed. 586.

may be enforced by the officers of the postal service on their own inspection, as where the object is exposed and shows that it is prohibited.<sup>47</sup> However, letters and sealed packages subject to letter postage in the mails can be opened and examined only under like warrant issued on similar oath or affirmation particularly describing the thing to be seized as is required when papers are subjected to search in one's own household.<sup>48</sup> Nevertheless, regulations for the exclusion of this class of matter from the mails may be enforced on competent evidence of their violation obtained in other ways,<sup>49</sup> as from the persons receiving the letters or packages,<sup>50</sup> or from the agents depositing them in the post office, or others cognizant of the fact.<sup>51</sup>

b. Constitutionality of Statutes

Although statutes designating what may be carried in the mails and what must be excluded therefrom must be consistent with the rights of the people as reserved by the Constitution, statutes which forbid the use of the mails for the transmission of designated classes of letters, circulars, newspapers, publications, etc., have been uniformly upheld as not being in violation of any constitutional provision.

Although statutes designating what may be carried in the mails and what must be excluded therefrom must be consistent with the rights of the people as reserved by the Constitution,<sup>52</sup> and congressional exclusion of matter from the mails must rest directly on regulation of the mails which is use of the mails or things mailed, and not on a regulation of the user,<sup>53</sup> statutes which forbid the use of the mails for the transmission of designated classes of letters, circulars, newspapers, publications, etc., have been uniformly upheld as not being in violation of any constitutional provision.<sup>54</sup> Thus the courts have upheld the validity of statutes forbidding the transmission of a wide variety of mail matter, such as letters, circulars, newspapers and publications concerning lotteries,<sup>55</sup> matter in furtherance of schemes to defraud,<sup>56</sup> matter on the surface of which appears language, scurrilous, defamatory, threatening, or calculated and obviously intended to reflect injuriously on the character or conduct of others,<sup>57</sup> matter alleging or advocating treason, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States,<sup>58</sup> and obscene, lewd, lascivious, indecent, or filthy matter.<sup>59</sup>

Places over which congress has no control. It is not necessary that congress should have the power to deal with crime or immorality within the states in order to maintain that it possesses the power to forbid the use of the mails in aid of the perpetration of crime or immorality.<sup>60</sup>

c. Particular Classes of Matter Excluded from Mails

Various classes of matter are excluded from the mails by statutes.

Under the provisions of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S.C.A. § 1463, all matter otherwise mailable by law on the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, and all post cards on which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, or obscene character are written or printed or otherwise impressed or apparent are expressly declared to be nonmailable matter, and the postmaster general is thereby vested with power to exclude such matter from the mails.<sup>61</sup> However, the postmaster general may not exclude such matter from the mail unless the inscriptions thereon are libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or reflect injuri-

Mailing indecent, libelous, defamatory, or threatening matter on envelopes, wrappers, or postal cards as criminal offense see infra § 47.

Matter held properly excluded

U.S.—Hardy v. Goldman, D.C.N.Y., 38 F.Supp. 1011.

ously on another's character or conduct,<sup>62</sup> and the libel law determines whether the inscribed words are defamatory.<sup>63</sup> Thus, the words, in order to be defamatory and, therefore, nonmailable, must charge some identifiable person with something.<sup>64</sup> Hence, the statute has no application to the defamation of a state.<sup>65</sup>

Letters, circulars, and advertisements concerning lotteries. Under a statute providing that no letters, packages, postal cards, or circulars concerning any lottery or gift enterprise or similar scheme, and no newspaper, circular, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift, enterprise, or similar scheme, shall be deposited in, or carried by, the mails of the United States, it was held that letters or circulars concerning lotteries, whether considered legal or illegal, might be excluded from the mails<sup>66</sup> if known, and not merely supposed or suspected, to concern lotteries.<sup>67</sup> However, letters addressed to lottery associations or lottery agents could not, simply because they were thus addressed, be deemed to be letters concerning lotteries and as such excluded.<sup>68</sup> By the provisions of this statute, newspapers which publish in their columns advertisements for lotteries, or similar schemes, could be excluded from the mails; but, inasmuch as exclusion of newspapers and other publications from the mails is highly arbitrary in its character, it could be justified only where the statute was clearly applicable to the supposed objectionable publication.<sup>69</sup> There were various decisions under this statute as to what were, or were not, lotteries.<sup>70</sup>

Matter in violation of Espionage Act. One of the purposes of the Espionage Act is to prevent dissemination and distribution through the mails of publications intended to embarrass the government in its successful prosecution of war,<sup>71</sup> and to the end that a united front should be presented to the enemy.<sup>72</sup> Thus, it excludes from the mails any publication, the natural effect of which is to encourage resistance to a law of the United States, and the words of which are used in an endeavor to persuade to resistance,<sup>73</sup> although the duty to resist is not mentioned directly, and the interests of the persons addressed in resistance are not directly suggested.<sup>74</sup> Accordingly, it has been held that newspaper articles, denouncing the war, the government, the president, and congress, and wartime legislation, and impliedly counseling violations of the draft law, stating that soldiers in large numbers were becoming insane, etc., render the newspaper nonmailable on the ground that it was conveying false reports and false statements with intent to promote the success of the enemies of the United States, and attempting to cause disloyalty and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces and obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States.<sup>75</sup> Hence, where a newspaper publishes nonmailable matter of this character so frequently as to justify the presumption that it will continue to do so, the postmaster general may revoke the privilege not merely as to particular issues containing such matter, but indefinitely for the future, subject to the publisher's right to secure a renewal on proper application and proof that the paper will conform to the law.<sup>76</sup>

Matter tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination. Under a statute declaring nonmailable matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination, a newspaper which published articles encouraging insurrections against the government and destruction of the established society and which approved and justified the crimes committed in the Russian Revolution could be excluded from the mails.<sup>77</sup> This, it was said, was not a censorship of the press but merely a refusal of the government to distribute mail matter tending to its own destruction.<sup>78</sup>

Obscene matter and articles adapted for immoral use. Under the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461, all matter which is obscene, lewd, and lascivious, and every article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, or intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, and all matter giving information how any of these things may be obtained, are expressly declared to be nonmailable matter, and may be excluded from the mails.<sup>79</sup> However, in order to bar matter from the mails as obscene, the standard must be the likelihood that the matter will so arouse the salacity of the reader to whom it is sent as to outweigh any literary, scientific, or other merits it may have in that reader's hands.<sup>80</sup> The fact that some of the phrases of a publication may stimulate the senses of some persons is insufficient to bar the publication from the mails if the publication as a whole is not stimulating to the senses of the ordinary reader.<sup>81</sup> The provisions of the statute relating to the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion do not exclude from the mails properly prepared information intended for properly qualified persons.<sup>82</sup> Thus, it does not prohibit the distribution of properly prepared information to physicians or other qualified persons.<sup>83</sup>

Poisons. Under the statute declaring poisons to be nonmailable matter, it was held that the authority of the postmaster general to prescribe regulations for the mailing of poisons or compositions containing poison not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property was limited to regulations as to the "preparation and packing" thereof.<sup>84</sup>

d. Determination as to Mailability and Review

The postmaster general is vested with power to determine what matter is mailable, and it is his duty to do so. In determining what matter is nonmailable the postmaster general is required to use judgment and discretion, and his decision is regarded as conclusive, unless he has exceeded his authority, and the courts will not interfere with such action unless it is clearly shown to be wrong.

The postmaster general is vested with power to determine what matter is mailable,<sup>85</sup> and it is his duty to do so.<sup>86</sup> Such questions, it has been said, can be decided most conveniently by those who are charged with the administration of the postal laws.<sup>87</sup> In determining what matter is nonmailable the postmaster general is required to use judgment and discretion.<sup>88</sup> Every intendment of the law is in favor of his action,<sup>89</sup> and his decision is regarded as con-

- a. In general
- b. Constitutionality of statutes
- c. Application of statutes

- d. Proceedings
- e. Review of decisions granting fraud orders

a. In General

Under the statutes the postmaster general, on evidence satisfactory to him, is authorized to deny the right to receive mail to any person or corporation engaged in one of the schemes or enterprises therein described, and, when the postmaster general acts under these statutes, he issues what is called a "fraud order".

The right of the postmaster general to exclude letters or to refuse to permit their delivery to persons addressed is wholly statutory,<sup>6</sup> and, in order to authorize the postmaster general to exclude matter from the mails, the facts must in some aspect be sufficient to permit him under the statute to make the order.<sup>7</sup> Under the statutes the postmaster general, on evidence satisfactory to him, is authorized to deny the right to receive mail to any person or corporation engaged in one of the schemes or enterprises therein described,<sup>8</sup> and, when the postmaster general acts under these statutes, he issues what is called a "fraud order,"<sup>9</sup> which is defined supra § 1, and the postmaster is bound to obey such an order unless the postmaster general exceeded his authority in making it.<sup>10</sup> Hence, when the postmaster general is satisfied that any person or corporation is engaged in one of the schemes or enterprises therein described, he may and should issue a fraud order forbidding the delivery of registered letters, and the payment of money orders to such person or corporation,<sup>11</sup> and such person or corporation is not entitled to receive through the mails either the registered letters or money orders provided for in the statute when the postmaster general has made an order forbidding the delivery of such articles.<sup>12</sup> Although former statutory provisions were in terms confined to registered letters and money orders, and it was accordingly held that no order could validly be made depriving a citizen or corporation of the ordinary use of the mails, notwithstanding his or its violation of some provision of the statute,<sup>13</sup> the present statutory provision, 39 U.S.C.A. § 259, permits the order to include any other letters or mail matter directed to any such person or company, and the effect of the provision is to deny all mail facilities to those shown to have violated any provision of the statute.<sup>14</sup>

The obvious purpose of the statute is to purge the mails of objectionable or nonmailable matter,<sup>15</sup> so as to protect the public from fraudulent practices through use of the mails,<sup>16</sup> and to prevent future injury to the public by denying the use of the mails to aid a fraudulent scheme,<sup>17</sup> and not to impose punishment on violators,<sup>18</sup> and, therefore, congress wisely provided that such mails could be arrested at the destination offices and returned to the senders with the advice that such mail was ensnaring innocent senders.<sup>19</sup> Thus, the decisive factor in the issuance of a fraud order is not whether anyone complains of fraud or was in fact defrauded,<sup>20</sup> but whether the mails are being used to project a scheme which may result in obtaining money from members of the public by means of false and fraudulent statements.<sup>21</sup>

Opening registered letters. Under the provisions of the statute, neither the making of a fraud order nor its enforcement requires or permits the opening of any registered letter, and the statute expressly prohibits the opening of any such registered letter by the postmaster not addressed to him.<sup>22</sup>

b. Constitutionality of Statutes

The statutes authorizing the postmaster general to deny the use of postal facilities to a person or corporation which, on satisfactory evidence to him, is found to be engaged in a violation of some provision of the statutes have been held constitutional.

The constitutionality of the statutes in so far as they confer authority on the postmaster general to direct a postmaster to refuse the delivery of registered letters or the payment of money orders to a person or corporation which, on evidence satisfactory to him, is found to be engaged in a violation of some provision of the statutes has been very generally upheld.<sup>23</sup> So, also, while there are a limited number of decisions in which it is either held or said that congress is without power to enact a provision denying all mail facilities whatever to those shown to have violated any provision of the statutes,<sup>24</sup> the constitutionality of that part of the statute which so provides has been upheld by a decision of the supreme court of the United States,<sup>25</sup> by decisions of the federal courts,<sup>26</sup> and of the Philippine courts,<sup>27</sup> and by an opinion of the attorney general of the United States.<sup>28</sup>

The mail-fraud statutes apply to schemes for the distribution of money, etc., by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, and to all schemes or devices for obtaining money or property of any kind by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises.

The mail-fraud statutes apply to schemes for the distribution of money, etc., by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, and to all schemes or devices for obtaining money or property of any kind by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises.<sup>29</sup> With respect to the first class of cases, although the rule was formerly otherwise,<sup>30</sup> the statutes include all lotteries, whether or not fraudulent.<sup>31</sup> However, no case can be brought within the second class except on a showing of actual fraud in fact.<sup>32</sup> The statute was not intended to cover any case which the postmaster general might regard as based on false opinions,<sup>33</sup> or, in other words, it is not the design of the statute to vest the postmaster general with authority to determine between contradictory views held in apparent good faith and the subject of merits or demerits of which may fairly be said to be a matter of opinion.<sup>34</sup> On the other hand, the issuance of fraud orders is justified in case of misrepresentations of fact as distinguished from mere statements of opinion and laudatory statements used in advertising,<sup>35</sup> if made with intent to deceive,<sup>36</sup> or where the alleged nonmailable matter makes extravagant and unfounded claims in support of the article sought to be sold;<sup>37</sup> and what might otherwise be a legitimate business or profession may be so conducted as to render it a fraud and deception and authorize the issuance of a fraud order.<sup>38</sup> The statutes are not restricted to schemes or devices which are wanting in all the elements of a legitimate business,<sup>39</sup> and the government is not called on to separate the legitimate from the illegitimate matter but will suppress the whole from the mails.<sup>40</sup> It is not material to the power to issue a fraud order that the business in question is so successful that the time when the fraud in the schemes will find its victims is delayed indefinitely, as long as it is certain that such time will come, and may come, sooner or later, dependent on contingencies which neither the promisors nor the investors can control or forecast.<sup>41</sup> In any event, however, it has been said that the fraudulent intent in any particular case should be made clearly to appear before a fraud order is made.<sup>42</sup>

In order to be subject to the mail-fraud statutes, it is not necessary that an advertisement make an express misrepresentation,<sup>43</sup> but it is sufficient if it is so artfully designed as to mislead those responding to it.<sup>44</sup> The determination as to whether advertisements constituted part of a fraudulent

Test

Under statute authorizing fraud order by postmaster general, test whether contest is a "lottery" or "scheme for distribution of money by chance" is whether success in any given contest depends on skill or on chance, and, if award of prize depends on exercise by participants of judgment, plan is not a "lottery" since then element of chance is lacking and winning depends on exercise of superior knowledge or skill.—National Conference on Legalizing Lotteries v. Farley, 96 F.2d 861, 63 App.D.C. 319, certiorari denied 59 S.Ct. 85, 305 U.S. 624, 83 L.Ed. 399.

scheme in violation of mail-fraud statutes would be made in the light of the effect which the advertisements would most probably produce on ordinary minds.<sup>45</sup>

d. Proceedings

Since it is essential that the evidence of a violation of the statute be satisfactory to the postmaster general in order to authorize the issuance of a fraud order, an investigation and hearing are necessary to determine whether or not the statute has been violated. No particular form of hearing is required and no particular person need conduct the hearing, and rules of evidence need not be applied with all the strictness with which they are required to be applied in proceedings in a court.

While the fraud-order statutes do not in terms require a hearing,<sup>46</sup> it is essential that the evidence of a violation of the statute be satisfactory to the postmaster general in order to authorize the issuance of a fraud order,<sup>47</sup> otherwise, by the express terms of the statute, he is without power to act.<sup>48</sup> Hence, an investigation and hearing are necessary to determine whether or not the statute has been violated.<sup>49</sup> While it has been said that it is competent for the post office department to determine ex parte that a person or corporation is using the mails in conducting a scheme to defraud and base a fraud order on such finding,<sup>50</sup> although on demand a full and fair hearing should be permitted,<sup>51</sup> it has been held that a fraud order, to be of any effect, must be on an investigation and hearing at which evidence is received both for and against the party against whom the fraud order is sought,<sup>52</sup> or at least an opportunity is given him to present evidence.<sup>53</sup>

The methods and procedure of a court hearing are not required,<sup>54</sup> and no particular form of hearing is necessary and no particular person need conduct the hearing.<sup>55</sup> A large amount of discretion in the conduct of the hearing is reposed in the person conducting it,<sup>56</sup> and such person is not bound to apply the rules of evidence with all the strictness with which they are required to be applied in proceedings in a court.<sup>57</sup> Thus, the person

Advertising medium

Where seller of innocent but worthless photographs and books advertised booklet on "Art of Love," cartoon booklets, and "actual photos, Montmartre Type," in "pulp" magazines containing salacious stories and advertisements, evidence that other publications of similar names were known to be grossly obscene, although other similar publications were not obscene, authorized fraud order, since an advertiser is bound by the consequences of his choice of magazines, which made his advertisements misleading, irrespective of whether he knew the contents of such magazines in advance of publication.—Farley v. Simmons, supra.

Advertisements as a whole may be completely misleading, although every sentence separately considered is literally true. This may be because things are omitted that should be said, or because they are composed or purposely printed in such way as to mislead.—Donaldson v. Read Magazine, App.D.C., 68 S.Ct. 591, 333 U.S. 178, 92 L.Ed. 628.

Protection of trusting

People have a right to assume that fraudulent advertising traps will not be laid to ensnare them.

Laws are made to protect the trusting as well as the suspicious.

Trained and experienced persons

Fact that false statement may be obviously false to those who are trained and experienced does not change its character or take away its power to deceive others less experienced.—Fields v. Hannegan, 162 F.2d 17, 82 U.S.App.D.C. 234, certiorari denied 68 S.Ct. 83, 332 U.S. 773, 92 L.Ed. 358.

Administrative Procedure Act confining prescribed procedure to cases of adjudication required by statute to be determined on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, does not apply to a hearing held before a trial examiner in the post office department to determine recommendations for issuance of mail fraud order by the postmaster general since fraud order statutes require no hearing.—Bersoff v. #### Experiments

Refusing to permit experiment before him was held within discretion of postal solicitor holding hearing concerning allegedly fraudulent scheme involving preparation claimed to charge batteries.—Elliott Works v. Frisk, D.C.Iowa, 58 F.2d 820.

Hearsay evidence

(1) A hearing held by assistant solicitor of post office department which resulted in fraud order against magazine advertiser, was whose conduct is being investigated may properly be required to assume the burden of proof to show that his business is legitimate.<sup>58</sup> It has been held that the person whose conduct is being investigated must be given a reasonable opportunity to cross-examine witnesses on the vital issue of fraudulent intent,<sup>59</sup> and that an undue limitation of this right of cross-examination constitutes error.<sup>60</sup> The granting or refusal of a continuance is within the discretion of the person conducting the hearing,<sup>61</sup> and a fraud order will not be considered erroneous because of the denial of a general request for a continuance made without any showing of facts to support it.<sup>62</sup>

Hearing pending. If a date several weeks in advance is fixed for a hearing on the question of the issuance of a fraud order against a person or company, the postmaster general is without power to direct all mail addressed to such person or company to be withheld in the meantime.<sup>63</sup> However, a stipulation under which a person against whom a fraud order had been prepared agreed that mail addressed to him might be impounded by the post office authorities pending a hearing on the fraud order is proper.<sup>64</sup>

Modification or suspension of fraud order. A mail-fraud order prohibiting the use of the mails is similar to an equitable injunction to restrain future conduct,<sup>65</sup> and, like such an injunction, should be subject to modification whenever it appears that one or more of the restraints imposed are no longer needed to protect the public.<sup>66</sup> Thus, where the postmaster general concludes that the fraud order is broader than is necessary to reach the fraud proved, he has not only the power but the duty to reduce its scope to what is essential for that purpose.<sup>67</sup> However, where, after issuing a fraud order, the postmaster general ceases to be satisfied and so found and certified, he has no authority to suspend the order,<sup>68</sup> but it is his duty to revoke it;<sup>69</sup> and, if the finding on which the order was based is revoked, this in effect constitutes a revocation of the order.<sup>70</sup>

e. Review of Decisions Granting Fraud Orders

- (1) In general
- (2) Injunction

(1) In General

The decision of the postmaster general granting a fraud order will not be reviewed by the courts, where it is fairly arrived at, and there is substantial evidence to support it, so that it cannot justly be said to be palpably wrong and, therefore, arbitrary.

The decision of the postmaster general granting a fraud order will not be reviewed by the courts, where it is fairly arrived at, and there is substantial evidence to support it, so that it cannot justly be said to be palpably wrong and, therefore, arbitrary.<sup>71</sup> Nevertheless, within a limited

Where in proceeding looking to entry of fraud order by postmaster general witnesses for government relied on general professional knowledge acquired in part from medical text-books on which they relied, refusal to permit cross-examination concerning statements in other medical books, some of which were shown to be respectable authorities, was prejudicial error, even though some of the books were merely medical dictionaries which government experts testified they would not consult to ascertain the efficacy of a remedy, and the fact-finding official indicated that he had read the excluded materials and would have made the same adverse findings if such materials had been admitted.—*Reilly v. range, courts of equity will grant relief against fraud orders,<sup>72</sup> but the power of a court of equity to review a fraud order issued by the postmaster general is limited to a determination of whether, from the evidence adduced the hearing, there is substantial evidence in fact, as distinguished from opinion, to support the order.<sup>73</sup> Hence, one who is injured by a fraud order may apply to the courts for redress in cases where it is shown that the postmaster general exceeded his authority,<sup>74</sup> or that his act was palpably wrong<sup>75</sup> or an unwarranted arbitrary invasion of the rights of the party against whom the order was issued;<sup>76</sup> and this is so even if the order was made after a hearing.<sup>77</sup>

Certiorari. The decision of the postmaster general that a fraud order shall issue cannot be reviewed by certiorari because the decision is not the exercise of a judicial function,<sup>78</sup> and for the further reason that, if there was an arbitrary exercise of statutory power or a ruling in excess of the jurisdiction conferred by statute on the postmaster, appropriate relief might be obtained in a court of equity.<sup>79</sup>

Mandamus will not lie to compel the annulment of a fraud order where the director of the posts did not exceed his authority in making the order.<sup>80</sup>

(2) Injunction

The enforcement of a fraud order will not be enjoined when fairly arrived at and supported by substantial evidence, where there is any evidence to support the order, or where it is not palpably wrong.

In accordance with the general rules applicable to the granting of injunctions against public officers, as discussed in Injunctions §§ 108, 109, the enforcement of a fraud order will not be enjoined when fairly arrived at<sup>81</sup> and supported by substantial evidence,<sup>82</sup> where there is any evidence to support the order,<sup>83</sup> or where it is not palpably wrong.<sup>84</sup> In any event, a preliminary injunction will not issue unless the court is clearly convinced that plaintiff would ultimately prevail,<sup>85</sup> and a very strong showing is necessary to warrant the granting of an order for a preliminary injunction.<sup>86</sup> Accordingly, in applying these principles, it has been held that the enforcement of a fraud order will not be enjoined where the business involved is shown to be one for which the postal system cannot lawfully be used.<sup>87</sup> So an injunction will not lie against the enforcement of a fraud order where plaintiff admitted quackery in his electric belt business, but claimed that the course of business indicated by the past had been mended by the employment of a licensed physician, nothing being shown concerning his professional qualifications and his pecuniary independence of plaintiff and the electric belt business,<sup>88</sup> and an injunction will not issue to prevent the detaining by a postmaster of letters addressed to the secretary of a lottery company under the direction of the postmaster general where the pleadings fail to show that the letters had no connection with the lottery business.<sup>89</sup>

On the other hand, if the order is palpably wrong or without any evidence to sustain it, an injunction will issue against its enforcement, if it appears that the enforcement of the order will inflict irreparable injury and that no adequate remedy at law exists.<sup>90</sup> In order to warrant a court in issuing an injunction restraining the enforcement of a fraud order, it should be averred and shown that there is at least a reasonable doubt on the merits,<sup>91</sup> and a bill to enjoin a fraud order will not be sustained unless it makes a clear prima facie case that the facts could not possibly support the order or that complainant's legal or constitutional right has been violated,<sup>92</sup> and such a bill is insufficient where it shows a hearing on due notice on charges of fraud clearly within the statute but does not show what proofs were adduced.<sup>93</sup>

Rules of evidence governing actions generally and suits for injunctions in relation to burden of proof,<sup>94</sup> presumptions,<sup>95</sup> and weight and sufficiency<sup>96</sup> of evidence apply in suits to enjoin the enforcement of fraud orders. However, as to the admissibility of evidence, it has been held that the decision must be based on the administrative record alone,<sup>97</sup> and that evidence involving the merits of the controversy at the hearing before the postmaster general may not be considered as evidence,<sup>98</sup> since the court on such an application is not acting as a court of review but only on the question whether the postmaster general in the hearing and the execution of the fraud order acted arbitrarily and whether the order was issued in the absence of any evidence to sustain it, or whether the order as issued was induced by any other error of law.<sup>99</sup>

§ 23. Postage

Postage is the fee charged by law for carrying letters, packets, and documents by the public mails, and, except in certain cases specially provided for by law, postage on all matter is required to be prepaid by stamps at the time of mailing.

Postage is the fee charged by law for carrying letters, packets, and documents by the public mails,<sup>1</sup> and, except in certain cases specially provided for by law, postage on all matter is required to be prepaid by stamps at the time of mailing.<sup>2</sup> Although congress has divided mailable matter into several classes and prescribed the rates of postage to be charged for each class, the rates charged must not discriminate between competing businesses of the same kind.<sup>3</sup> Under a statute providing that all

Necessity of prejudice

Where alleged wrongdoers were given due notice of charge of violation of mail-fraud statutes, were given a hearing at which they were represented by counsel, and were permitted the fullest latitude in making their defense before the trial examiner, even if manner of making up findings of facts was improper and failure of postmaster general to acquaint himself with the evidence before signing fraud order was irregular, some prejudice must be shown to have resulted to alleged wrongdoers to justify the issuance of an injunction restraining enforcement of fraud order.—Pike v. Walker, supra.

postmaster from carrying out fraud order issued by postmaster general alleged that plaintiff had been engaged in business of furnishing to customers a service which consisted of placing a prayer card containing customer's name in a machine called a cosmic generator, which gathered from the ether and distributed forces which had a beneficent effect on health of customers, particularly of customers who had faith, complaint stated no cause of action and was properly dismissed.—Neher v. #### Nonprejudicial error

In action to restrain postmaster from obeying an order of acting postmaster general excluding manufacturer from use of mails in conducting its business, district court erred in admitting evidence in addition to that appearing in administrative record before acting postmaster general but the error did not require reversal where findings and conclusions clearly demonstrated that they were based solely on evidence before solicitor for post office department.—Jarvis v. mail matter of the first class on which one full rate of postage has been prepaid shall be forwarded to its destination, charged with the unpaid rate to be collected on delivery, letters on which postage has not been fully prepaid at the time of mailing them should be charged at the office of delivery only with the amount of the deficiency.<sup>4</sup> A letter on which postage has not been fully paid may be retained until such payment is made.<sup>5</sup>

Under a statute fixing the postage rates on books consisting wholly of reading matter or reading matter with incidental blank spaces for students' notation, school work books having perforated pages capable of removal in the daily class work of the student are books within the meaning of the statute,<sup>6</sup> even though they lack the feature of permanency,<sup>7</sup> since congress is assumed to have intended the well settled meaning of the words used in the statute.<sup>8</sup> Therefore, such a statute does not authorize an administrative regulation interposing the additional factor of permanency.<sup>9</sup> Post office regulations defining the term "books" in aid of statutes prescribing the rate of postage on books, which were not defined by congress, have been held reasonable,<sup>10</sup> and as having the force and effect of law.<sup>11</sup>

Recovery of postage paid. Under a statute providing that the postmaster general in his discretion may authorize a refund of any postage paid on any mail matter for which service is not rendered, or is collected in excess of the lawful rate, it has been held that such statute does not create a right to sue,<sup>12</sup> but such right of action exists only when the postmaster general has been satisfied that the requirements of the statute have been met,<sup>13</sup> and this, under the statute, depends entirely on the discretion of the postmaster general.<sup>14</sup> However, it has been held that the payment of excess postage is the proper subject matter of an action at law,<sup>15</sup> and that the special remedy under the statute is not necessarily exclusive.<sup>16</sup> Furthermore, where newspapers intended for shipment by express were sent to the station in the same conveyance as those intended for mailing, and on the failure of the express company to take charge of them were weighed and shipped by mail, the amount paid for the transportation of such papers was not paid under a mistake which entitles the publisher to recover either the total sum or the difference between that sum and the express rates on the newspapers so transported.<sup>17</sup>

21. U.S.—Montgomery Ward & Co.,

Since the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 361, provides that postage stamps and stamped envelopes shall be furnished by the postmaster general to all postmasters and kept for sale at all post offices, and each postmaster shall be held accountable for all such stamps and envelopes furnished to him, the only disposition that a postmaster can make of stamps intrusted to him is the sale thereof at their face value for cash to third persons,<sup>22</sup> and they may not be sold for any larger or less sum than the values indicated on their faces.<sup>23</sup> The postmaster general has power to prescribe regulations requiring postmasters to make proper returns of sales of stamps at their respective offices, and such regulations have the force of law.<sup>24</sup>

Sale of "specimen" stamps. The sale of newspaper and periodical stamps as a "specimen" under order of an assistant postmaster general to all persons willing to pay face value therefor, in accordance with a circular sent throughout the community, never canceled or repudiated by the postmaster general, is not unlawful, and the government, having ratified the sale by accepting the proceeds thereof, cannot maintain replevin for the recovery of the stamps so sold on the theory that they were stolen, embezzled, and purloined from the United States and are still its property.<sup>25</sup>

Defacing or canceling stamps. Since stamps, under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 365, are to be defaced by the postmaster at the mailing office in such manner as the postmaster general may direct, under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 367, relating to the method of canceling stamps the postmaster general is authorized to substitute for the black printing inks and writing fluids used under the postal regulations any canceling ink which is uniform and which actual experiment and test have shown to his satisfaction to be best calculated to guard against fraud, and to order its use in all post offices where stamps are canceled.<sup>26</sup>

As securities. Postage stamps are not securities of the United States within the meaning of a statute requiring the name of each person whose portrait shall be placed on any of the plates for securities of the United States to be inscribed below the portrait,<sup>27</sup> and the postmaster general is not obliged to insert names of persons in connection with portraits on postage stamps.<sup>28</sup> Under statutes forbidding the making of anything in the likeness of, or similitude to, the "securities" of the United States and declaring that securities of the United States shall include stamps, canceled postage stamps are not securities or obligations of the United States.<sup>29</sup> It has been held otherwise, however, in respect of uncanceled obsolete postage stamps which resemble in general appearance ordinary postage stamps, and which are calculated to mislead the casual observer into thinking that they are ordinary postage stamps, and susceptible of use as such.<sup>30</sup>

b. Stamped Envelopes

Except as otherwise provided by law, the postmaster general is required to provide suitable letter and newspaper envelopes, to be known as stamped envelopes, and to sell them, as nearly as may be, at the cost of procuring them, with the addition of the value of the postage stamps impressed thereon.

Except where authority is given by statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 363, to sell them at a discount to certain designated agents who will agree to resell them without discount under rules to be prescribed by the postmaster general, the postmaster general is required by law to provide suitable letter and newspaper envelopes, to be known as stamped envelopes, and to sell them, as nearly as may be, at the cost of procuring them, with the addition of the value of the postage stamps impressed thereon;<sup>31</sup> and no stamped envelopes or newspaper wrappers shall be sold by the post office department at less, in addition to the legal postage, than the cost, including all salaries, clerical, and other expenses connected therewith.<sup>32</sup>

c. Postal Cards

A postal card is a card bearing a printed stamp and issued by a government as a convenient substitute for paper and envelope, and a post card is an unofficial card transmissible through the mails on the prepayment of the same postage as a postal card.

§ 25. Money Orders

- a. In general
- b. Negotiability

a. In General

A money order is an order for a specified sum of money, not less than, or exceeding, the amounts designated by statute, made out at a money order office, on a blank form prescribed by law and the post office regulations, and payable at some other money order office. The government exercises a governmental power in the establishment and operation of the postal money order system.

A money order is an order for a specified sum of money, not less than, or exceeding, the amounts designated by statute, made out at a money order office, on a blank form prescribed by law and the post office regulations, and payable at some other money order office.<sup>37</sup> The person who purchases the money order is known as the remitter, and the person to whom it is payable as the payee.<sup>38</sup> The establishment of the postal money order system was a voluntary act of the government<sup>39</sup> for the convenience of the public,<sup>40</sup> and is merely an incident of the postal system and was inaugurated to enable the citizens to transmit small sums safely through the mails,<sup>41</sup> and, as it had the right to do, it made such provisions as it saw fit as to the issuance and payment of the orders and in other particulars.<sup>42</sup> The government exercises a governmental power for the public benefit in the establishment and operation of the postal money order system,<sup>43</sup> and is not engaging in commercial transactions,<sup>44</sup> notwithstanding it may have some aspects of commercial banking.<sup>45</sup> Thus the issuance of postal money orders is a governmental function rather than a commercial function.<sup>46</sup>

Indorsement. The provision that the payee may by written indorsement direct it to be paid to any other person does not require that the indorsement shall be by the hands of the payee, but it will be sufficient if the payee directs another to indorse his name on the order.<sup>47</sup> So also, by the express provisions of this statute, more than one indorsement of a money order renders it invalid and not payable.<sup>48</sup>

Recovery by United States of wrong or fraudulent payment. Under a statute providing that, where money of the post office department has been paid to any person in consequence of fraudulent representations, or by the mistake, collusion, or misconduct of any officer or other employee in the postal service, the postmaster general shall cause suit to be brought to recover such wrong or fraudulent payment, the United States may recover the amount paid out on money orders fraudulently issued from the persons to whom it was paid regardless of the good faith of such persons in acquiring the orders.<sup>49</sup>

Negligence of postal employee

Where bank telephoned branch post office and was erroneously advised by unidentified clerk that described postal money orders were

Liability of government in case of wrong payment. Under Postal Regulations 1902 § 1006 the post office department disclaims any responsibility after a money order has once been paid, "but in case of wrong payment it will endeavor to recover the amount for the owner, provided such wrong payment was not brought about through the fault of the remitter, payee, or indorsee."<sup>50</sup>

Repayment of order. Under a statute providing that the postmaster issuing a money order shall repay the amount of it on application of the person who obtained it, and the return of the order, the remitter of the order cannot revoke it and demand back his money against the will of the payee after it has come into the possession of the latter, since by the express provisions of the statute, in order to enable the former to obtain a repayment of the funds deposited, he must produce the order.<sup>51</sup> The payee of the order, on complying with the requirements of the law and of the regulations of the post office department, is entitled to payment of the money on demand;<sup>52</sup> and the remitter of the order cannot, previous to its being paid, by any notice that he may give to the office at which it is payable, forbid the payment thereof to the payee.<sup>53</sup>

Lost money orders. The government may make such regulations as it deems fit with respect to the payment of lost money orders,<sup>54</sup> and under the statutes the issuance and payment of warrants for lost money orders are placed within the judgment of the postmaster general or under rules and regulations issued by him,<sup>55</sup> and payment for a lost money order can only be secured by proof satisfactory to him.<sup>56</sup>

Postal money orders are not negotiable instruments.

Since the issuance of postal money orders is a governmental function rather than a commercial function, as discussed supra subdivision a of this section, postal money orders are not negotiable instruments<sup>57</sup> subject to the defenses permitted to bona fide holders for value by the law merchant,<sup>58</sup> and necessarily whoever takes one is charged with knowledge of that fact.<sup>59</sup>

§ 26. Deposit, Collection, and Forwarding of Mail Matter

The postmaster general may determine what shall be regarded as a depository for mail.

The postmaster general may determine what shall be regarded as a depository for mail,<sup>60</sup> and the depository so designated becomes an authorized depository, that is to say, a depository authorized by the post office department as a receptacle for the receipt or delivery of mail matter.<sup>61</sup> He may designate as such a depository boxes privately owned and controlled, and placed in buildings or otherwise on any mail route.<sup>62</sup> A letter is properly mailed when it is addressed, stamped, and deposited in the proper place for the receipt of the mails to be delivered under the public authority,<sup>63</sup> such as the post office,<sup>64</sup> or a street letter box,<sup>65</sup> or a mail chute under the control of the postal department.<sup>66</sup> So also, it has been held that a statute providing that every railway postal clerk or other carrier of the mails shall receive any mail matter presented to him if properly prepaid by stamps and deliver it at the next post office at which he arrives includes city letter carriers<sup>67</sup> and rural route mail valid and bank thereupon cashed the orders which in fact were invalid, the negligence of the unidentified postal clerk did not prejudice government's right to refuse payment of the spurious orders or to recover money paid by government to bank on presentation of the orders before invalidity of the orders was discovered.—U. ### a. In General

Generally the power to contract for the carriage of the mails is, by statute, vested in the postmaster general.

Generally the power to contract for the carriage of the mails is, by statute, vested in the postmaster general,<sup>71</sup> and, in the absence of statute, a postmaster has no authority to make contracts with respect to the mail-messenger service, or to direct it, and cannot bind the government for that purpose.<sup>72</sup> The collector of customs is under no disability by reason of his office to contract with the government for the carriage of the mails,<sup>73</sup> and a corporation organized under the laws of any state in the United States is an American citizen within a statute authorizing bids by "American citizens" for the carrying of mails on American steamships between ports of the United States and foreign ports.<sup>74</sup>

Damages for refusal to award contract. An indemnity agreed on as the amount to be paid for canceling a contract affords the measure of damages for illegally refusing to award it.<sup>75</sup>

"Miss mails." As used in a contract to carry the mails, wherein the contractor agrees to be responsible for any "miss mails" which occur on the part of the mail route on which he has to transport the mails, the term "miss mails" means that the parties were stipulating for the accidental or casual omissions to deliver the mail within the prescribed period.<sup>76</sup>

b. Advertisements and Bids

The manifest objects of statutes providing for advertisements and bids as to general mail lettings is to secure for the government the benefit of competition, to obtain efficiency and economy in service, and to prevent favoritism.

The manifest objects of statutes providing for advertisements and bids as to general mail lettings is to secure for the government the benefit of competition,<sup>77</sup> to obtain efficiency and economy in the service,<sup>78</sup> and to prevent favoritism.<sup>79</sup> Nevertheless, other statutes dispense with the necessity of advertisements and bids in enumerated cases, such, for instance, as temporary mail lettings,<sup>80</sup> and contracts with railway companies<sup>81</sup> or with the owners or masters of steamships, steamboats, or other vessels, plying on the waters, or between ports, of the United States, for carrying the mails on such routes.<sup>82</sup>

New advertisements and bids. Where part of an established post route is found to be impracticable, that portion of it may be changed by the post office department without thereby creating a new route requiring a new advertisement and bid.<sup>83</sup> A proposal for expedited and increased service, with the order made thereon, does not constitute a new contract requiring a new advertisement,<sup>84</sup> but makes simply an alteration of the existing contract in a manner authorized by statute.<sup>85</sup> So it has been held that the postmaster general may accept a proposal from a steamship company, the holder of a contract with the government for performing second-class mail service, to perform first-class mail service on the condition that, if the proposal be accepted, the existing contract shall be rescinded,<sup>86</sup> but the company should be required to stipulate for the safety of the government that, in consideration of the above, the existing contract shall, at the option of the government, be void in case some party other than the company shall be the successful bidder for first-class service.<sup>87</sup> On the other hand, where a contract has been entered into for foreign mail service for a term of ten years, no authority exists to make a new contract with the same party for five years in lieu of the ten years<sup>88</sup> unless the party procured the contract by new bidding after due advertisement.<sup>89</sup> A condition may not be inserted in a contract by which the postmaster general and the contractor may subsequently vary the terms of the contract, both as to price of ships and rate of compensation, without submitting the rate to the effect of competition, because otherwise it would indirectly empower the postmaster general to make a contract without inviting bids.<sup>90</sup> So also, under a statute providing that all contracts for carrying the mails shall be awarded to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance, it has been held that if the lowest bidder fails to enter into a contract and perform the service, the postmaster general cannot legally contract with the next lowest bidder who will agree to perform the service at his bid for the whole term, without readvertising,<sup>91</sup> and that, after once advertising and failing to secure a contractor, a contract cannot be lawfully made with a person who has not been a bidder on a proposition informally submitted for the contract term.<sup>92</sup>

Requisites and sufficiency. As a condition precedent to the making of a valid contract for carrying the mails, the advertisements for bids must satisfy the statutory requirements,<sup>93</sup> and no amount of precision in the bid can obviate a want of compliance with the statute in the advertisement.<sup>94</sup> If the statute provides that the advertisement shall state the time and frequency of the service, no valid contract can be made on an advertisement which does not comply with this requirement.<sup>95</sup> Under a statute empowering the postmaster general to enter into contracts with American citizens for the carrying of mails on American steamships, between ports of the United States and ports in foreign countries, the mail service on such lines to be equitably distributed, and contracts to be made with the lowest responsible bidder for the performance of the mail service on each route, the postmaster general is required to advertise for separate proposals for each separate and distinct line of service.<sup>96</sup> Specific information in an advertisement of existing conditions within the government's knowledge and not within the knowledge of the bidders must be regarded as in the nature of a warranty on which the bidders are entitled to rely.<sup>97</sup>

Bids. Bids must conform to all proper and reasonable administrative regulations of the post office department.<sup>98</sup> A bid may be signed by a person without writing his name at the foot of the instrument.<sup>99</sup> In the absence of statutory authority, the post office department has no power to enforce a rule that bids for carrying the mails should not be withdrawn after a certain time, whether or not accepted,<sup>1</sup> and this is so although the bidder promised not to withdraw the bid before the department decides on it because the common law refuses to hold any man responsible for what he has promised<sup>2</sup> unless he has either received a valuable consideration or bound himself by a sealed instrument.<sup>3</sup> However, notice must be given in order to constitute a withdrawal,<sup>4</sup> and mere intention to withdraw does not constitute a withdrawal.<sup>5</sup>

Acceptance or rejection of bids. Where advertisements and bids for mail contracts are made necessary by statute, all contracts for carrying the mails are required to be awarded to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement,<sup>6</sup> except that, in case of contracts for ocean mail service on American vessels, the postmaster general may reject all bids not in his opinion reasonable for the obtaining of the purposes named.<sup>7</sup> The first-mentioned provision is subject to limitations contained in another statute that all bids be accompanied by a bond with approved sureties to perform the services proposed in the bid.<sup>8</sup> Where the postmaster general is empowered by statute to enter into contracts for carrying the mails without preliminary advertisements and bids, he may disregard a bid made on an advertisement to carry mail over a designated route, and, without advertising, make a contract with another party.<sup>9</sup>

c. Duration

The statute limiting the duration of a contract for carrying the mails does not prescribe the duration of the contract made under its provisions, but merely fixes a maximum time which the postmaster general may not exceed.

Since the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 436, provides that, except as otherwise provided by law, no contract for carrying the mails shall be made for a term longer than four years, and no contract for carrying the mails on the seas shall be made for a term longer than two years, the only limitation of time which can be placed on the postmaster general is that prescribed by this statute.<sup>10</sup> This statute, it has been held, does not prescribe the duration of the contract made under its provisions, but merely fixes a maximum time which the postmaster general may not exceed.<sup>11</sup> Under a statute authorizing the postmaster general to make a contract with American citizens for the carrying of mails to foreign ports on American vessels, for a term not less than five, and not more than ten, years in duration, whenever the service begins under a contract, no matter what its character, the term has begun, and no power exists to make that term longer than ten years.<sup>12</sup>

Implied contract. A continuance of service after the termination of a written contract for carrying the mails for a designated term of years creates no obligation of a renewed contract on a like compensation and for the same duration of time.<sup>13</sup> The more reasonable implication is that the service is temporary, and terminable at the option of either party.<sup>14</sup>

d. Form, Requisites, and Sufficiency

No particular form of contract is necessary, and the acceptance by the post office department of the proposal of a bidder after public notice to carry the mails in accordance therewith creates a contract.

No particular form of contract is necessary.<sup>15</sup> The acceptance by the post office department of the proposal of a bidder after public notice to carry the mails in accordance therewith creates a contract of the same force and effect as though a formal contract had been written out and signed by the parties,<sup>16</sup> and where the postmaster general states the terms on which a mail transportation service may be performed, and a railroad company acquiesces and performs, it constitutes a contract.<sup>17</sup> So a contract to carry the mails by a railroad company is entered into by the acceptance of the railroad company of a so-called "distance circular" providing that it should be carried subject to acts of congress and rules and regulations of the post office department.<sup>18</sup> While it is provided by statute that contracts entered into by the post office department should be in the name of the United States, the non-observance of this requirement will not invalidate a contract made for, and in behalf of, the United States which is otherwise unobjectionable.<sup>19</sup>

e. Construction and Operation

General principles governing the construction and operation of contracts apply to contracts for carrying the mails.

General principles governing the construction and operation of contracts apply to contracts for carrying the mails.<sup>20</sup> A contract for postal car facilities, which makes the liability of the United States conditional on future appropriations, is valid, and becomes operative if appropriations are subsequently made;<sup>21</sup> and if a contract, dependent on an appropriation for its validity, does not exceed the appropriation it will be deemed valid, although the appropriation is exhausted.<sup>22</sup> Nevertheless, a contract with the postmaster general for carrying the mails to a foreign country, which by its terms is to commence when it is ratified by congress, and to be void in case such ratification is withheld, does not bind either party until the ratification stipulated for is given;<sup>23</sup> and such a contract does not bind the postmaster general who makes it, or his successor, to recommend the ratification of the contract to congress;<sup>24</sup> and, if congress does not ratify the contract, the contractor has no right to carry the mail,<sup>25</sup> and the postmaster general has no lawful authority to permit letters or packages to be transported by him from one post office to another.<sup>26</sup>

f. Modification

While contracts for carrying the mails customarily provide that the postmaster general may discontinue the services whenever the public interest require such discontinuance, in no other mode can the contract be changed except as provided by statute or by the mutual assent of the parties.

While contracts for transportation of the mails customarily provide that the postmaster general may discontinue the services whenever the public interest in his judgment shall require such discontinuance on payment by the government of a designated indemnity, as discussed infra § 30, in no other mode can the contract be changed except, as provided by statute, by advertisement and bids as in the case of original contracts,<sup>27</sup> or by the mutual assent of the parties;<sup>28</sup> and any attempted change by the United States will render it liable in damages in the same manner, and to the same extent, as a private party.<sup>29</sup> Furthermore, an authorized contract for the carriage of the mails by a postmaster general can no more be changed by his successor without the assent of the contractor than by himself, the change of incumbents not in anywise affecting or impairing the rights of the contractors.<sup>30</sup> So, where a contract for continuous service in the carriage of mails by a railroad company has been entered into, and performance thereof commenced and continued by the company, the contract, the terms of which are specified, cannot be changed or modified by the mere protest of the company,<sup>31</sup> and no action can be predicated on such protest, the remedy of the company being in a refusal to perform.<sup>32</sup>

g. Performance or Breach

A contractor should be released from further obligations under a contract for carrying the mails where performance is impossible.

In accordance with elementary principles, where a contract for carriage of the mails is impossible of performance and the parties entered into the contract with a mutual want of information for which neither can be properly held responsible, the contractor should be released from further obligations under it.<sup>33</sup>

h. Annulment, Vacation, or Suspension

Contracts for carriage of the mails may be annulled or vacated by the postmaster general on grounds prescribed by statute, by the postal regulations, or by the contract itself.

Contracts for carriage of the mails may be annulled or vacated by the postmaster general on grounds prescribed by statute, by the postal regulations, or by the contract itself.<sup>34</sup> Thus violation of the statute prohibiting contractors from delivery of the mails to a person not authorized to receive them is a ground for the annulment of the contract.<sup>35</sup>

Combination to prevent bidding. Under a statute making it a ground for annulling a contract for the carriage of the mails that the contractor entered into a combination to prevent bids for carrying the mails, or made any agreement to induce any other person not to bid on such contract, the contracts held by parties to an agreement, which is in violation of this statute, are subject to annulment, by the postmaster general,<sup>36</sup> and it is immaterial

Held combination to prevent competitive bidding

Agreement among operators of air mail lines to carry out a device by which extensions of existing lines would be granted and contracts for that the postmaster general consented to the agreement to allocate the contracts without competitive bidding,<sup>37</sup> or that the postmaster general urged such agreement on the parties,<sup>38</sup> since the statute makes no exception of a combination or agreement consented to, or instigated by, a public officer.<sup>39</sup> However, this statute does not authorize annulment of the contract of a successful bidder by reason of the fact that he had transferred his contract to another person, who was a competitor in the bidding, since this does not show any combination to prevent bidding,<sup>40</sup> and it is not a ground for annulment of a contract for carriage of the mails that one person bid for the contract in behalf of himself and others unless the arrangement was made and designed to defraud the government by preventing competition in the bids, or in some other way.<sup>41</sup>

Failure to perform service or disobedience of instructions. The postmaster general may annul a contract in accordance with a stipulation therein contained that he might do so in case of repeated failures, or for a failure, to perform services according to contract.<sup>42</sup> So also, if a contractor refused, after being instructed so to do, to give information as to the preparations made by him for the performance of his contract, it may be annulled.<sup>43</sup>

On discontinuance or curtailment of services on route. The postal regulations authorize the postmaster general to discontinue or curtail the service on any route in whole or in part whenever, in his judgment, the public interest shall require it, or for any other cause, on allowing as full indemnity to the contractor one month's pay on the amount of services dispensed with and a pro rata compensation for the amount of services retained and continued;<sup>44</sup> and, where on discontinuing part of the services the contractor refuses to accept the remaining work at a lower compensation, the postmaster general may annul the contract on allowing one month's pay as indemnity and relet the remaining services.<sup>45</sup> The power to terminate the contract by order of discontinuance allowing one month's extra pay is not predicated on an abandonment of the entire service.<sup>46</sup> Furthermore, after discontinuing the contract, the government is free to make such contracts as may be deemed best.<sup>47</sup> Accordingly, after a portion of the service is discontinued, the department may permit the balance to be performed by others without first giving the contractor an opportunity to perform.<sup>48</sup> The regulation authorizes a discontinuance for the purpose of readvertising and reletting the service on an increased schedule, in preference to permitting the contractor to perform the increased service at the pro rata to which he will be entitled under his contract.<sup>49</sup> The exercise by the postmaster general of his authority to discontinue the contract cannot be reversed by the courts, in the absence of the existence of a fraudulent motive or bad faith,<sup>50</sup> and relief to the contractor for hardships resulting from his mistake in making an improvident contract can only be obtained at the hands of congress.<sup>51</sup>

Restoration of suspended contract. Where a mail transportation service, suspended because of alleged imperfect performance, is restored on condition that the contractor shall pay the cost of the service during suspension, he is bound thereby, and cannot thereafter recover from the government the amount paid by it for such service, and deducted from the moneys due him.<sup>52</sup>

a. In General

The object of the statute requiring all bids for carrying the mails to be accompanied by a bond with approved sureties to perform the services proposed in the bid is to protect the government from imposition through worthless bids, and other statutory provisions requiring contracts for carrying the mails to be awarded to the lowest bidder must be construed in connection with the requirements of this statute.

The object of the statute requiring all bids for carrying the mails to be accompanied by a bond with approved sureties to perform the services proposed in the bid is to protect the government from imposition through worthless bids,<sup>53</sup> and other statutory provisions requiring contracts for carrying the mails to be awarded to the lowest bidder must be construed in connection with the requirements of this statute.<sup>54</sup> Even if the statutory requirements have been complied with in point of form, if the postmaster general is satisfied from other sources of information that the bond is worthless, he may and should treat the bid as though the bond had not accompanied it.<sup>55</sup> A bond appearing on its face to have been altered should not be accepted<sup>56</sup> unless by a note or in some way it is attested that the change was made with the assent of the parties.<sup>57</sup> The law does not require that there should be witnesses to the bond, but it is expedient, and safety requires them.<sup>58</sup> An admitted clerical error in a contractor's bond due to a mistake of a clerk in the post office department will not be permitted to operate to the prejudice of the contractor.<sup>59</sup>

b. Scope, Extent, and Period of Liability

General rules governing the scope and extent of liability on officers' bonds apply to bonds of mail contractors.

General rules governing the scope and extent of liability on officers' bonds apply to bonds of mail contractors.<sup>60</sup> The sureties of a mail contractor are responsible to the government for the whole term of the contract,<sup>61</sup> and as well after the death of their principal as before,<sup>62</sup> and on the death of the principal, before the expiration of the term for which the contract was made, are bound to fulfill its stipulation,<sup>63</sup> or, in case of nonfulfillment, are liable for the damages which may ensue from letting it at a higher price.<sup>64</sup>

c. Discharge or Release of Sureties

Any change in the terms of the contract for carrying the mails releases the sureties on the contract for subsequent liability thereon, and if a material change is made in the bond by interlineation or otherwise, subsequent to its execution, the instrument is thereby rendered void.

Any change in the terms of a contract for carrying the mails releases the sureties on the contract from subsequent liability thereon,<sup>65</sup> and if a material change is made in the bond by interlineation or otherwise, subsequent to its execution, the instrument is thereby rendered void<sup>66</sup> unless it can clearly be shown that after the change the parties assented to it and still acknowledge the signing and sealing as their act.<sup>67</sup> So, where the contractors have fully performed their duties in accordance with the terms of the contract, and their accounts have been adjusted and settled, and the route discontinued, this operates as a discharge of the sureties.<sup>68</sup>

d. Enforcement and Cancellation

An action will lie against the contractor and the sureties on his bid for a breach of the bond; general rules relating to the burden of proof and the admissibility and weight and sufficiency of the evidence in actions on bonds apply in such actions.

An action will lie against the contractor and the sureties on his bid for a breach of the bond.<sup>69</sup> It is no defense to such action that, previous to the time when the surety entered into his obligation, the government had taken the obligation of another surety for the performance by the principal of the same contract<sup>70</sup> or that an action brought to enforce

it had been voluntarily dismissed.<sup>71</sup> Furthermore, it has been held that, where there are two independent undertakings, by one of which the principal and sureties shall be liable for the amount of the bond as liquidated damages to be recovered in an action of debt on the bond in case of a breach thereof, and the other constituting a contract of indemnity to pay the government an amount contingent on the actual loss to the government occasioned by breach of stipulations to perform the service by the bidder, a recovery on the latter bond for actual damages, occasioned by a breach of its provisions, constitutes no bar to an action on the other bond to recover the sum fixed as liquidated damages;<sup>72</sup> but there is also authority directly to the contrary.<sup>73</sup>

Evidence. General rules relating to the burden of proof<sup>74</sup> and the admissibility<sup>75</sup> and weight and sufficiency<sup>76</sup> of the evidence in actions on bonds or official bonds apply in actions on bonds of this character.

Cancellation. A bill by the surety on a contractor's bond to procure the cancellation thereof will not be entertained where complainant has an adequate remedy at law.<sup>77</sup>

§ 29. — Transfer, Assignment, or Subletting of Contracts

The purposes of the statutes relating to the transfer, assignment, or subletting of contracts for the carriage of the mails are to prevent liability of the government on the contract to any person other than the accepted bidder and to prevent speculating contractors from reaping a profit. Under these statutes the subletting or transfer of a contract for the carriage of the mails without the consent of the postmaster general empowers the postmaster general to terminate the contract.

government on the contract to any person other than the accepted bidder<sup>78</sup> and to prevent speculating contractors from reaping a profit out of the government by subletting for a sum smaller than contracted for.<sup>79</sup> Under these statutes the subletting or transfer of a contract for the carriage of the mails without the consent of the postmaster general,<sup>80</sup> or for a sum smaller than that for which the contractor agreed to perform the services,<sup>81</sup> empowers the postmaster general to terminate the contract, and an annulment of the contract on this ground is effective even though no reason is assigned.<sup>82</sup>

Nevertheless, under these statutes, the subletting or transfer of a contract for the carriage of the mails without the consent of the postmaster general,<sup>83</sup> or for a sum smaller than that for which the original contractor had stipulated to perform the contract,<sup>84</sup> does not render the original contract void, but merely voidable at the option of the government, it being discretionary with the postmaster general whether or not he shall annul the contract;<sup>85</sup> nor does the statute making null and void all assignments or transfers of contracts for transporting the mail in any way affect the original contract for carrying the mails, but operates only on the assignment or transfer thereof.<sup>86</sup> Since the statutes relating specifically to contracts for the carriage of the mails prohibit the assignment, transfer, or subletting of any contracts for the carriage of the mails without the consent of the postmaster general, and declare that contracts in violation thereof shall be "null and void," it has accordingly been held that, because these contracts are illegal, the parties acquire no rights under them and they will not be enforced,<sup>87</sup> and, prior to the enactment of these statutes, it had been held, under the statute relating to transfers of public contracts generally, that one to whom a contract for carrying the

When, on mail carrier's default, surety on a bond takes over contract to carry mail, he stands for all practical purposes in shoes of contractor and becomes the contractor within statutes restricting assignment or transfer of any mail contracts.—Clemons v. Huckaby, 37 So. 2d 504, 251 Ala. 419.

mails had been transferred could maintain no action thereon against the United States,<sup>88</sup> although it would seem that such a transfer would not be absolutely void under the statute, but that the government might treat the contract as annulled or recognize the transfer at its option, as discussed in the C.J.S. title United States § 95, also 65 C.J. p 1345 note 10.

Agreements not forbidden by statutes. The statutes relating to the transfer or assignment of mail contracts do not prevent one who has contracted for carrying the mails from lawfully contracting with, or employing, another to perform for him the services required by the contract,<sup>89</sup> since the statute does not debar the contractor from having the assistance of servants<sup>90</sup> or prevent a person who is actually agent for another, but who contracts in his own name, from holding the contract for the benefit of the person who performs the service, and agreeing to collect and hold the pay for him and as his property when received.<sup>91</sup>

Permission to sublet contract. Where a contract is sublet with the permission of the postmaster general, it creates a privity of contract between the subcontractor and the United States on which he can maintain an action,<sup>92</sup> and this privity extends not only to compensation for services performed, but to extra pay for services dispensed with.<sup>93</sup>

Requisites and sufficiency of contract of subletting. A statute providing that, when any person who has contracted for carrying the mails shall lawfully sublet any such contract, he shall file in the office of the postmaster general a copy of the contract, notice of which shall be sent to the general accounting office, contemplates only written contracts, and in no event can a contract for carrying the mails be sublet by an oral contract.<sup>94</sup>

Breach of contract of subletting. After a contract of subletting or substitution has been made and approved by the postmaster general, a breach thereof by either party will render him liable in damages to the other.<sup>95</sup>

Termination of subcontract. The postmaster general's approval of a subcontract for the carrying of the mails can be withdrawn at any time,<sup>96</sup> and such withdrawal will have the effect of terminating the contractual relations between the contractor and his subcontractor;<sup>97</sup> and if, for any of the reasons stated in the original contract and also in the subcontract, the postmaster general should annul the former, the latter would fall with it.<sup>98</sup> Where a contract of subletting stipulated for a discharge thereof on the removal of the contractor before the expiration of his term, the contractor may refuse a contract for increased service without becoming liable in damages to the subcontractor.<sup>99</sup>

If a subcontractor for the conveyance of the mails abandons his contract, the post office department may employ temporary service on the route,<sup>1</sup> and may reinstate the original contractor without permitting the subcontractor to resume service under the subcontract.<sup>2</sup> Without the consent of that department the subcontractor cannot be reinstated by the contractor.<sup>3</sup>

Bonds of subcontractors. A bond given by a subcontractor or assignee of a mail contract, sublet in violation of the statute which renders the subletting null and void, is also null and void,<sup>4</sup> and its invalidity may be asserted in an action thereon, notwithstanding defendant was a party to the illegal act.<sup>5</sup> If, however, the contract between the parties does not amount to an assignment or transfer of the mail contract, the bond may be enforced.<sup>6</sup>

Civil Aeronautics Board, 171 F.2d 139, 84 U.S.App.D.C. 96.

Power of board

Where board properly required air carrier separately to report expenses of holding company originally incurred by air carrier, failure to make such report necessitated board's judgment allocation of certain per cent of air carrier's executive department expense to holding company in determining compensation for carrying the mail and such allocation which involved a large degree of judgment was well within the powers of the board.—Pan American Airways v. Civil Aeronautics Board, supra.

Presumptions

Where statute empowering board to fix fair and reasonable rates for transportation of air mail was not necessarily retroactive and was as apt with respect to the future as it was to the past, court was required to give great weight to presumption against retroactivity and to limited legislative purpose apparent from history.—Transcontinental & Western Air v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 169 F.2d 893, 83 U.S.App.D.C. 358, affirmed 69 S.Ct. 756, 336 U.S. 601, 93 L.Ed. 911.

Just compensation

Congress, in enacting statute authorizing board to fix fair and reasonable rate of compensation for transportation of mail by aircraft, did not intend that board should determine and pay just compensation in the sense in which that term is used in Fifth Amendment to federal Constitution.—Capital Airlines v. U. S., 90 F.Supp. 926, 116 Ct.Cl. 850, certiorari denied 71 S.Ct. 121.

Intervention

(1) In proceeding by board for determination of mail rates to be paid to certificated transatlantic air mail

Voluntary service. Where voluntary service is accepted by the department, and congress passes an act referring the claim therefor and directing how damages thereon, if any, shall be computed, the service is thereby validated and the contractor entitled to compensation.<sup>10</sup> The fact that the postmaster general made the order irregularly will not deprive the contractor of his right to compensation when he has performed the services ordered.<sup>11</sup>

Presentation of claim for compensation. Presentation of a claim for compensation to the second assistant postmaster general, his being the proper office in the department for considering it, is equivalent to, and a compliance with, any rule requiring presentation to the postmaster general.<sup>12</sup>

b. Air Carriers

Under statutory provisions the civil aeronautics board is empowered and directed to fix and determine from time to time, after notice and hearing, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for the transportation of mail by aircraft.

Under statutory provisions the civil aeronautics board is empowered and directed, on its own initiative, or on petition of the postmaster general or an air carrier, to fix and determine from time to time, after notice and hearing, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for the transportation of mail by aircraft,<sup>13</sup> and to make such rates effective carriers, board could permit noncertificated transatlantic airline carrying cargo between many of the same areas and points without advantage of mail payments to intervene and could limit intervention to final rate determinations and to issues involving extent, if any, to which ordinary cargo operations of mail carriers should be underwritten with mail pay.—Seaboard & Western Airlines v. Civil Aeronautics Board, C.A.D.C., 181 F.2d 515, certiorari denied, 70 S.Ct. 997, 339 U.S. 963, 94 L.Ed. —.

(2) Under statute providing that board is empowered on its own initiative or on petition of postmaster general or of air carrier to determine reasonable rates for compensation for transportation of mail by aircraft, presence of postmaster general is intended to protect the public interest, and hence a private objecting air carrier is not entitled to intervene on sole ground of protection of the public interest.—Seaboard & Western Airlines v. Civil Aeronautics Board, supra.

Under prior statutory provisions, where air mail contracts were annulled by the postmaster general by virtue of statutory authority, it was held that such annulment did not forfeit air mail pay earned by plaintiffs under the contracts before such from such date as it shall determine to be proper;<sup>14</sup> but such statutory provisions are not intended to underwrite the profitable operation of the carrier's business<sup>15</sup> or to indemnify the carrier against loss and guarantee any return on the investments,<sup>16</sup> since such a construction in practical effect would have the tendency to transform it into a cost-plus system of regulation.<sup>17</sup> It has been stated that in the administration of these statutory provisions a computation of the revenues and expenses of the carrier is required,<sup>18</sup> since the board in fixing and determining the fair and reasonable rates of compensation should take into consideration the need of the air carrier to insure the performance of the service and to maintain and continue the development of air transportation required for commerce, postal service, and national defense.<sup>19</sup> However, these statutory provisions do not give the board authority to make rates retroactive beyond the date on which the carrier's petition was filed.<sup>20</sup> Since the statutory provisions require notice and hearing, notice and an opportunity to be heard are requisite to the validity of an order of the board as to rates,<sup>21</sup> and, where no issue is framed on the subject of the order, as required by the rules of the civil aeronautics board, and no evidence is received on the subject, the order of the board is without the requisite notice and opportunity to be heard.<sup>22</sup>

Judicial review. Under the statute providing that any order, affirmative or negative, issued by the board, except any order in respect of any foreign air carrier subject to presidential approval, shall be subject to review by a designated court, it has been held that temporary rate orders are not reviewable,<sup>23</sup> since they are not final.<sup>24</sup> By the provisions of the statute the right of review is limited to a person having a substantial interest in such order,<sup>25</sup> and, since the presence of the postmaster general in a rate proceeding is for the protection of the public interest, an objecting private air carrier is not entitled to appeal an order determining the rate of mail pay on the sole ground of protecting the public interest.<sup>26</sup>

Set-offs

Where civil aeronautics board had set up reserve against receivables due from Axis and Axis-dominated countries for carriage of mail appearing on air carrier's books as revenue and such receivables later became collectible and board determined that such amounts would not be treated as income in computation of net revenue of air carrier in test year in determining compensation for carrying the mail, board properly directed that when postmaster general should collect any of the old accounts he should set them off against the amounts otherwise due the air carrier.—Pan American Airways v. Civil Aeronautics Board, 171 F.2d 139, 84 U.S.App.D.C. 96.

Reasonable return

Since the board may consider need of air carrier for compensation to insure transportation of mail and enable carrier under efficient management to continue development of air transportation for postal service and national defense, a carrier is entitled to reasonable return plus need measured by economical management, and any excess used to offset uneconomical management or operation is not permitted.—*Seaboard & Western Airlines v. #### Unchallenged order

Final rate fixed by order of civil aeronautics board for carrying of mail by an airline could not be revised retroactively by board to cov-

c. Railroad Companies

- (1) In general
- (2) Land grant railroads

(1) In General

Statutory provisions require all railway common carriers to transport such mail matter as may be offered for transportation by the United States for which service they are to receive a fair and reasonable compensation to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Although a railway company owes no common-carrier obligation to either the United States or the general public to transport mail,<sup>27</sup> on the enactment of the statute which requires all railway common carriers to transport such mail matter as may be offered for transportation by the United States in the manner, under the conditions, and with the service prescribed by the postmaster general,<sup>28</sup> it became not only proper, but necessary, that provision be made for compensating them,<sup>29</sup> and the statute accordingly declared that they should be entitled to receive fair and reasonable compensation for such transportation and for the service connected therewith.<sup>30</sup> To this end the statute empowered and directed the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the fair and reasonable compensation which the carrier is entitled to receive,<sup>31</sup> and to prescribe the methods for ascertaining such rates,<sup>32</sup> and to make such classification of carriers as may be just and reasonable and, where just and equitable, fix general rates applicable to all carriers in the same classification;<sup>33</sup> and this last provision does not preclude an examination of the general rate applicable to a particular carrier,<sup>34</sup> but, on the contrary, requires the commission to take rates paid to other carriers into account.<sup>35</sup> Such rates are to be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission only after notice and hearing,<sup>36</sup> and the determination of the commission as to fair and reasonable compensation to a railroad for carrying the mail is given presumptive weight<sup>37</sup> and places the burden on the carrier to show that the general rate is unfair and unreasonable as applied to it,<sup>38</sup> and the burden is not on the commission to show that the rate is fair and reasonable.<sup>39</sup>

By virtue of these provisions, the commission is authorized to state a fair and reasonable rate of compensation for mail service rendered from and after the date of application for such determination.<sup>40</sup> The statute provides that after a specified time from the entry of the rate order the postmaster general or a carrier is authorized to apply for a reexamination of the order,<sup>41</sup> and under this provision, where the commission changes the classification of a carrier as to give it a higher general classification and rate of compensation, the carrier is entitled to compensation at such rate from the date of the order effecting the change.<sup>42</sup> Where application is made for reexamination, the commission has power to determine that the rate of compensation being received is proper and sufficient,

Method of computation construed

The order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, under statute, that "in computing the miles of service of a storage car or lesser unit, the maximum space authorized in either direction of a round-trip car run shall be regarded as the space to be computed in both directions unless any part of the car containing such unit be used by the railroad company in the return movement," was held to include, under the term "lesser unit," "closed-pouch space" and not solely "storage-space" units.—Chicago & B. #### Acquiescence

The acceptance by a railroad for a short period of time, without protest, of continued payment for transportation of mails at former classification rates less than those of a new classification effected by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, did not amount to acquiescence on the part of the carrier or bar its right to recover compensation at the higher classification rate.—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. U. S., 79 Ct.Cl. 298—Macon, D. & S. R. Co. v. U. S., 78 Ct.Cl. 251.

or it may find that the carrier is entitled to more and order that it be paid,<sup>43</sup> and, since the application for reexamination initiates the proceeding, the order for increased rates should relate to the time it was filed.<sup>44</sup> In other words, if the claim of the railroads is just they should be paid the increased rates from the moment the application is filed.<sup>45</sup> The rate of pay for storage space of cars on round-trip mail routes, as fixed retroactively by the Interstate Commerce Commission, applies on the return trip where no part thereof was used by the railroad company,<sup>46</sup> and the carrier's right thereto is not defeated by the failure of the post office department to restate the service accordingly.<sup>47</sup>

It has been held that an order of the commission refusing to increase an allowance to a railroad mail carrier is a negative order, and not an affirmative order, within the Urgent Deficiencies Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 41, giving the district court jurisdiction of cases to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend orders of the commission.<sup>48</sup> Furthermore, it has been stated that congress cannot be assumed to have made the extraordinary remedy of the Urgent Deficiencies Act applicable for the determination of the validity of railroad mail orders, even if affirmative.<sup>49</sup> However, the absence from the Railway Mail Pay Act, 39 U.S.C.A. § 523 et seq, of a provision for judicial review and the denial of jurisdiction under the Urgent Deficiencies Act, 28 U.S.C.A. § 41, does not preclude every character of judicial review,<sup>50</sup> as, under certain circumstances, such as the failure of the commission to order payment of the full amount payable under the finding of reasonable compensation, or if the order for additional compensation is confiscatory, the court of claims may have jurisdiction, as discussed in Federal Courts § 330, and, since the district courts have jurisdiction of any civil action relating to the postal laws, a suit will lie if the commission is alleged to have acted in excess of authority or otherwise illegally.<sup>51</sup>

Prior to the obligatory statute considered above, no railroad company, except those aided by land grants, discussed infra subsection (2) of this subdivision, could be compelled to carry the mails,<sup>52</sup> and such a company was at liberty to decline the service if it chose to do so.<sup>53</sup> Under former statutes which fixed maximum rates for the carrying of mails by railroad companies, the compensation for carrying the mails by such companies was entirely within the discretion of the postmaster general, subject to the limitation as to the maximum imposed by congress.<sup>54</sup> A railroad company was not necessarily entitled to the maximum rate allowed by law, but the postmaster general could make contracts at lower rates if he was able to do so,<sup>55</sup> the statutes merely fixing a maximum price, beyond which he could not incur a liability,<sup>56</sup> and of which the carrier was bound to take notice.<sup>57</sup> Furthermore, it has been held that, even in the absence of any contract, express or implied, where a railroad renders service under compulsion as a public necessity, expecting that a satisfactory arrangement will be made, and the department accepts the services, it should in conscience be paid for.<sup>58</sup>

Inferior service substituted by agreement. Where the government accepts from a railroad company an inferior substituted service in lieu of an agreed service rendered impossible of performance by a washout of a railroad company's tracks and pays fifty per cent of the contract price which the railroad company accepts without objection or reservation, no action will lie for further compensation.<sup>59</sup>

(2) Land Grant Railroads

Under the land grant acts, railroads aided by land grants are obliged to carry the mails, and statutory provisions allowing land grant railroads a certain per cent of the full compensation to be paid railroads generally for carrying the mails are not subject to judicial review.

Under the land grant acts, railroads aided by land grants are obliged to carry the mails,<sup>60</sup> and, since it is provided by statute that United States mails shall be transported on railroads receiving land grants in aid of their construction at such price as congress may by law direct, statutory provisions allowing land grant railroads a certain per cent of the full compensation to be paid railroads generally for carrying the mails are not subject to judicial review.<sup>61</sup> In order to constitute a land grant within the statutes, the lands granted must aid or help the construction;<sup>62</sup> and a road so constructed is a land aided or land grant road, and not otherwise.<sup>63</sup> However, the burden imposed by the statutes attaches on the acceptance of the aid,<sup>64</sup> no matter how disproportionate to the cost of constructing the road aided.<sup>65</sup> The provisions of the statutes limiting the amount of compensation attach to all tracks of a land grant company,<sup>66</sup> including those subsequently built,<sup>67</sup> although a railroad built partly by a land grant is entitled, for transportation of the mails, to full rates for such portion of the road as was not aided by the land grant.<sup>68</sup> The provisions of the statutes are not confined to the mere transportation of the mails, but include all services in connection therewith,<sup>69</sup> and they attach to the carrier like an easement or charge,<sup>70</sup> and affect every carrier which may thereafter use the road whatever the nature of its tenure,<sup>71</sup> although it received none of the land and obtained no benefit from the grant.<sup>72</sup>

Matter not within purview of statute. The statutes governing the compensation to be paid to land grant railroads do not include, as part of the mail, empty mail bags, which, by another statute, are classified with other property of the United States for transportation by freight or express.<sup>73</sup>

Estoppel of government to enforce statutes. Inaction of the post office department for a long period to require a land aided railroad to transport mail at eighty per cent of the compensation of other railroads which are not land aided does not estop it to force such road to transport mails at the eighty per cent rate.<sup>74</sup>

Effect of release

(1) Under Transportation Act, railroad acquired status of a nonland grant road for purpose of determining rates for transportation of United States mail immediately on filing required release with secretary of interior, and its right was not conditioned on subsequent approval of the release by secretary.—Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. U. S., 83 F.Supp. 1012, 113 Ct.Cl. 437, certiorari denied 70 S.Ct. 88, 338 U.S. 848, 94 L.Ed. —.

(2) Where purported releases filed by railroad with secretary of interior for purpose of securing status of a nonland grant road for purpose of determining rates for transportation of United States mail did not conform with requirements prescribed by secretary when they were filed, but a few weeks thereafter the releases were approved by secretary despite their variance, railroad's transition from a land grant to a nonland grant road did not take place until date of secretary's approval.—Southern Pac. Co. v. U. S., 69 F.Supp. 211, 107 Ct.Cl. 513, certiorari denied 68 S.Ct. 55, 332 U.S. 757, 92 L.Ed. 342.

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 654, and similar statutes, in the case of a vessel of the United States, the postmaster general may allow for carriage of mail by ocean carriers compensation not in excess of a designated maximum,<sup>75</sup> and where he fixes the compensation at the maximum rate he may not pay less.<sup>76</sup> The annulment by act of congress of a contract for the carriage of ocean mails is not intended to operate on a voyage previously started by one of the vessels of the contractor,<sup>77</sup> and, such vessel having made the round trip, the contractor is entitled to compensation therefor.<sup>78</sup>

Since the postmaster general, by statute, may require the transportation by any steamships of mail between the United States and any foreign port at the compensation fixed under authority of law, except as otherwise provided by treaty or convention, all ships, regardless of flag, are required to transport such mail tendered by the postmaster general, or his representative, under penalty of a fine and a refusal of clearance.<sup>79</sup> Thus, where mail is transported to a foreign port without any express contract but in accordance with the above statutory provisions, and it is not shown that the carrier agreed to look to some one else for its compensation, the primary liability to pay for these services is on the United States,<sup>80</sup> since the carrier, except where the United States has disavowed liability for the charges for the carrying of convention mails prior to demanding the services under this section,<sup>81</sup> has the right to assume that the one who demanded the service intended to pay for it,<sup>82</sup> and a contract to pay compensation is implied.<sup>83</sup> Furthermore, where the carrier looks primarily to the United States for payment, although there has been a disavowal of liability by the United States subsequent to the demand for services under this section which is protested by the carrier, the United States is liable for the payment of the compensation provided for in the postal laws and regulations,<sup>84</sup> especially where convention and nonconvention mails are commingled.<sup>85</sup>

e. Effect of Suspension or Discontinuance of Service

The authority of the postmaster general, under the postal regulations, to discontinue or curtail the service on any route in whole or in part on allowing as full indemnity to the contractor one month's pay on the amount of the services dispensed with, and a pro rata compensation for the amount of services retained and continued, is, in substance, incorporated in the instructions given by the department to bidders for contracts, and constitutes a part of the contract when made.

The authority of the postmaster general, under the postal regulations, to discontinue or curtail the service on any route in whole or in part whenever, in his judgment, the public interest shall require it, or for any other cause, on allowing as full indemnity to the contractor one month's pay on the amount of services dispensed with, and a pro rata compensation for the amount of services retained and continued, is, in substance, incorporated in the instructions given by the department to bidders for contracts, and constitutes a part of the contract when made.<sup>86</sup> The contractor takes the risk if the exercise of this authority might leave only the indemnity stipulated, that is, one month's extra pay.<sup>87</sup>

Comptroller general

There was no justification for the comptroller general's application of a rate and classification lower than that certified to him by the post office department and provided by the contract for carrying mails.—United Fruit Co. v. U. S., 93 Ct.Cl. 97.

Foreign ports

In determining compensation for carrying mails between ports of United States and ports of Canal Zone, latter are considered foreign ports.—Luckenbach S. S. Co. v. U. S., Ct.Cl. 50 S.Ct. 148, 280 U.S. 173, 74 L.Ed. 356.

"Sea postage," within meaning of prior statute, is difference between total postage and United States inland postage, plus inland postage of foreign receiving country when charged, and all intermediate transit charges when made.—Pacific Mail SS. Co. v. U. S., 28 Ct.Cl. 1.

The extra pay given by the contract for services dispensed with is not a penalty for breach of contract, but a compensation for changes in the service,<sup>88</sup> and is in the nature of liquidated damages.<sup>89</sup> Thus, it was held that the contractor was entitled to the extra pay provided for in the regulations and contract, when the postmaster general availed himself of his right thereunder to discontinue the service by reason of the Civil War,<sup>90</sup> although the contractor's routes lay within the enemies' lines,<sup>91</sup> or where the postmaster general, on refusal of the contractor to perform the services contracted for at a reduced rate, transferred the service to another person.<sup>92</sup> The claim for extra compensation does not accrue until payment thereof is due, namely, one month after the end of the current quarter.<sup>93</sup>

Right as affected by default of contractor. If the contractor is himself in default for neglect or failure to perform and the contract is annulled on that ground by the department,<sup>94</sup> or the service is discontinued at the request of the defaulting contractor himself, he cannot recover the one month's extra pay;<sup>95</sup> but, if the discontinuance is only in part, the contractor's right to extra pay is not forfeited by subsequent misconduct on the other part, although the one may be set off against the other.<sup>96</sup>

Right of subcontractor to extra pay. The privity of contract between a subcontractor and the United States created by the subletting of the original contract with the permission of the postmaster general, as discussed supra § 29, extends not only to compensation for services performed but to extra pay for services dispensed with,<sup>97</sup> and the subcontractor may sue to recover such extra pay,<sup>98</sup> and the fact that the contract sublet was obtained by fraudulent and corrupt practices will not affect the right of the subcontractor to extra pay on discontinuing the contract where he performed the service apparently in good faith and without notice of the corrupt and fraudulent practices which had secured it.<sup>99</sup>

(a) In General

A contractor, in the absence of an express contract so providing, is not entitled to extra compensation, although by statute the postmaster general is empowered to allow a contractor compensation for additional service.

Where service performed by a mail contractor in addition to that required by an express contract between him and the government is voluntary, the government is not liable for such additional service,<sup>1</sup> since a contractor, in the absence of an express contract so providing, is not entitled to extra compensation,<sup>2</sup> although by statute the postmaster general is empowered to allow a contractor compensation for additional service,<sup>3</sup> but before it can be paid it must appear that the sum to be paid is expressed in the order and added on the books of the department,<sup>4</sup> and that service additional to that required by the contract has been performed.<sup>5</sup> A proposal for increased service with the order made thereon does not constitute a new contract, but simply an alteration of the existing contract in the manner provided by statute.<sup>6</sup>

Delivery within eighty rods of railroad station. Under regulations so providing, the delivery of the mails by a railway carrier within eighty rods of a railway station is included as part of the railroad route, and the railway company is not entitled to additional pay for such services<sup>7</sup> in the absence of an express contract so providing.<sup>8</sup> The pay for such services must be held to be included in the general compensation fixed for the routes.<sup>9</sup>

Delivery to elevated railway station. The carriage of the mails up and down the steps at elevated railroad stations is called for by a contract for performing the covered regulation wagon, mail messenger, transfer, and mail station service on a mail route, in which the contractor agreed to take the mails from and deliver them to the post offices, mail stations, and cars, since delivery of the mail at the foot of the steps would not be sufficient.<sup>10</sup>

Additional services performed on request of unauthorized agent. A contractor for carrying the mails is not entitled to extra compensation for services outside the terms of his contract, which were performed in compliance with the unauthorized demand of the local postmaster, where, on protest to the postmaster general, the contractor was promptly relieved from such services and another contract was made for their performance.<sup>11</sup>

Increased weight resulting from enactment of parcel post law. Under a statute authorizing the postmaster general to add to the compensation for transportation of mails on railroad routes for the remainder of the contract term not exceeding a certain per cent thereof, because of the increased weight resulting from the enactment of the parcel post provision, the power of the postmaster general to grant or withhold additional compensation within the limit set is conclusive except on congress, so that a railroad company cannot by reason of an increase in the weight of the mails due to the postal provision maintain a claim for additional compensation in excess of that allowed by its contract.<sup>12</sup>

Quarters for distribution of registered mail. Regulations requiring railroad companies to provide at stations where transfer clerks are employed suitable and sufficient rooms for handling and storing the mails were intended to embrace transfer service at those points where mails are transferred from one railway company to another, but not to include the furnishing of quarters free of expense for the distribution of registered mail where it is handled in all respects as in a local post office.<sup>13</sup>

Who may sue for extra compensation. Where a contract for mail carriage was sublet, without filing a copy of the subcontract or obtaining the written consent of the postmaster general, and the government, although accepting the service performed by the subcontractor, neither had nor recognized any contractual relation except with his principal, treating the former as the agent of the latter, an action for extra service exacted by the government over his protest, but performed by the subcontractor, was properly brought by and in the name of the contractor.<sup>14</sup>

On reversal of direction of route. Under postal regulations which authorize the postmaster general to change schedules of departures and arrivals in all cases without increase in pay provided that the running time be not abridged, if the direction of a mail route is reversed but the change requires no greater speed or increase of distance, the carrier is not entitled to any increase in pay, even though the change may involve him in serious loss.<sup>15</sup>

(b) Contracts Requiring Additional Service without Compensation

Within well-defined limitations, the postmaster general may incorporate in contracts for the carriage of the mails and enforce stipulations requiring the performance of new or additional service without extra compensation.

Within well-defined limitations, the postmaster general may incorporate in contracts for the carriage of the mails and enforce stipulations requiring the performance of new or additional service without extra compensation.<sup>16</sup> The purpose of the provisions is to require performance without additional compensation for new or additional service which might arise from improved methods in the transaction of business of the post office department and in the increased demand or service resulting from the growth and development of towns and cities,<sup>17</sup> and gives to the postmaster general very considerable discretion calling for additional service which might result from these causes without compensation.<sup>18</sup> The phrase "new and additional service" is generally held to mean such service as only increases the volume of the kind of service specified in the contract,<sup>19</sup> and as a general rule no claim can be made for extra compensation for such services.<sup>20</sup> However, the phrase is not one of exact meaning, defining the precise extent of the obligation incurred, and permits the court to give it a reasonable construction with a view to doing justice between the parties,<sup>21</sup> and if the services, although of the same character, greatly increase the burden of the contractor and are not such as are contemplated by either of the parties when the contract was made, the contractor will be entitled to extra compensation;<sup>22</sup> and it is also well settled that the postmaster cannot under contracts of the character under consideration order services of a different character not within the contractual arrangement.<sup>23</sup> New and additional service is not service differing in kind.<sup>24</sup>

(2) Expedited Service

Under the statute providing compensation for expedited service in the carrying of mail, "expedited service" means a speedier performance of each trip than was originally stipulated.

Under the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 441, providing compensation for expedited service in the carrying of mail, "expedited service" means a speedier performance of each trip than was originally stipulated for.<sup>25</sup> "Men and horses" are included in the term "stock and carriers" as used in the statute,<sup>26</sup> and increased compensation for expedited service is to be calculated on the basis of the necessary men and stock required to perform the service under the original contract.<sup>27</sup> The "fifty per centum upon the contract as originally let," within the meaning of the statute, is fifty per cent on the compensation for all the service rendered both as originally stipulated and as increased by additional service,<sup>28</sup> which is to be determined by the rates fixed in the original contract.<sup>29</sup> The statutory limitation on the amount of compensation to be allowed for expedited mail service is equally obligatory on both parties, limiting the authority of the postmaster general, and notifying the contractor of such limitation;<sup>30</sup> and, if the compensation allowed is in excess of the statute, the action of the postmaster general is ultra vires, and to that extent void,<sup>31</sup> and, if shown by the evidence to be materially in excess, the contract will be deemed to have been made in mutual mistake of fact.<sup>32</sup> The postmaster general must decide all the facts existing and prospective which relate to expedited mail service, and from his decision, which is the result of his judgment and discretion, no appeal lies.<sup>33</sup> A proposal for expedited service with the order made therein does not constitute a new contract, but simply an alteration of the existing contract in the manner authorized by the statute.<sup>34</sup>

Actions. An order expediting service ordinarily is received as evidence of its value, but if made in mistake of fact or through fraudulent representations, and rescinded by the postmaster general, the contractor must prove his case,<sup>35</sup> although where the government seeks to set aside an order of expedition on the ground that the compensation exceeds the limitation of the statute the burden of proof is on it.<sup>36</sup>

(3) Additional and Expedited Service

A contractor may be entitled to compensation for both additional and expedited service.

Where the postmaster general increases expedition and requires additional service by one order at the same time, and the contractor performs accordingly, he is entitled to compensation for both.<sup>37</sup>

g. Deductions and Fines

The postmaster is authorized to make deductions from the pay of contractors for failures to perform service according to contract, and impose fines on them for other delinquencies; and when mail contracts are made they become subject to the provision of the statute, and the authority to make deductions and to impose fines becomes a part of the contract.

37. U.S.—Salisbury v. U. S., 28 Ct. Cl. 404.

The postmaster general is authorized to make deductions from the pay of contractors for failures to perform service according to contract, and impose fines on them for other delinquencies,<sup>38</sup> and when mail contracts are made they become subject to the provision of the statute, and the authority to make deductions and to impose fines becomes a part of the contract.<sup>39</sup> Fines imposed by virtue of the statute are in the nature of liquidated damages for the public inconvenience caused by a contractor's negligence,<sup>40</sup> and take contracts for carrying the mails out of the ordinary rules of law regulating penalties and liquidated damages.<sup>41</sup>

Contractors subject to statute. Except as to contractors for transporting the mail between the United States and a foreign country who are governed by a statute somewhat different in its provisions, the statute applies to all contractors whether they be natural persons or corporations.<sup>42</sup>

Grounds for deductions or fines. Under the statute under consideration, a railroad which enters into a contract to carry the mails on the conditions prescribed by law, among which are that contracts shall be made for the conveyance of the mails with due frequency and speed, and that the postmaster general shall require all railroads carrying mails to comply with the terms of their contracts as to time of arrival and departure of said mails, is liable to fines or deductions from its compensation for failure to maintain its mail train schedules;<sup>43</sup> and an omission by the post office department for a number of years to exercise its power to impose fines or make deductions on this ground, where the delays were of less than twenty-four hours, does not prevent it from exercising its power in case of shorter delays.<sup>44</sup> So the violation of a statute prohibiting the contractor from delivering mail matter to a person not authorized to receive it authorizes the imposition of a fine,<sup>45</sup> and, where a railway company refuses or neglects to execute its contract by furnishing the necessary space in a depot for the proper handling of the mails, the department may rent it and withhold the cost thereof from the contract earnings of the road.<sup>46</sup> On the other hand, under a statute providing that no pay shall be allowed for the use of "wooden full railway post-office cars run in any train between adjoining steel cars," the postmaster general is not authorized to refuse compensation to the contractor because it had run wooden cars in its trains between the engine and steel underframe cars and adjoining steel underframe cars.<sup>47</sup> Where certain mail containers carried on plaintiff's road were destined for a connecting line, the station of which was more than eighty rods distant, plaintiff's duty in connection therewith ceased when they left the cars of plaintiff, and it became the duty of defendants under their own postal regulations to transfer them to their destination and to provide for their carriage, and a deduction from the compensation of the railroad of the cost of such transfer is unauthorized.<sup>48</sup>

Discretion of postmaster general. The postmaster general is the judge whether deductions shall be made or fines imposed,<sup>49</sup> and it has very generally been held that the power conferred on the postmaster general to make deductions for failure to perform services according to contract or to impose fines for other delinquencies is discretionary,<sup>50</sup> and his decision is not reviewable by the courts<sup>51</sup> in the absence of fraud<sup>52</sup> or a manifest abuse<sup>53</sup> or excess<sup>54</sup> of the power conferred on him by the statute. He may make deductions or impose fines according as it may seem to him just and proper to do so under the particular circumstances of the case,<sup>55</sup> and prior to statutory amendment specifically authorizing a change or remission of fines and deductions in his discretion it had been held that where a deduction had been ordered by the postmaster general, and he subsequently became satisfied that the order was made under a misapprehension of the facts, he could rescind it.<sup>56</sup>

Amount of fine imposed. The statute places no limitation on the amount of the fine which may be imposed against the contractor;<sup>57</sup> and, under postal laws and regulations providing that the fine shall in each case be such as the postmaster general may impose in view of the gravity of the delinquency, the penalty imposed may be commensurate to the loss sustained by the government by reason of such delinquency.<sup>58</sup> The exercise by the postmaster general of his discretion as to the amount of fine imposed cannot be reviewed by the courts unless he manifestly abuses or exceeds the power thus conferred on him.<sup>59</sup>

From what moneys collected. The power to impose a fine can be exercised as long as there is money remaining due on the particular contract violated,<sup>60</sup> since the authority to impose a fine, as a general rule, is limited to the subject matter of the particular contract violated and to the payments which would otherwise be due to the contractor,<sup>61</sup> and the postmaster general cannot deduct a fine from moneys due on other contracts.<sup>62</sup> It has been held, however, that a contract for carriage of the mails may be so drafted as to authorize the postmaster general to deduct from compensation due under it the amount of a fine imposed for delinquency under a previous contract fully completed.<sup>63</sup>

Evidence of imposition or payment of fine. A document authenticated by the postmaster general, under the seal of the department, reciting the imposition of a fine on a mail route contractor is admissible as evidence of such fact,<sup>64</sup> and is sufficient prima facie to support a charge against the contractor, in his account with the department, of the amount of the fine;<sup>65</sup> but it is not sufficient evidence that the fine has been paid, so as to authorize a judgment for its amount against a subcontractor, through whose fault it was incurred.<sup>66</sup>

Exclusiveness of remedy. Although under the present statute it is provided that contractors shall also be answerable in damages for the proper care and transportation, and be accountable for any loss or damage resulting by reason of the failure to exercise due care, under the prior statute, not so providing, it was held that where the postal authorities established regulations for imposition of fines and making deductions for failure to perform services according to contracts, and for other delinquencies, and contracts for carrying the mails were made in contemplation of these regulations, the only remedy of the United States in case of default of contractors resulting in loss of mails was through the imposition of fines and the making of deductions,<sup>67</sup> although it was also held that such remedy was not exclusive.<sup>68</sup> Furthermore, under the prior statute, it was held that the United States could not sue the contractor for breach of contract;<sup>69</sup> and especially was this so where the post office department, with full knowledge of the facts, deducted from the compensation of a mail carrier a penalty for loss and damage to mail.<sup>70</sup>

Under contracts for carriage of mails to foreign countries. Under the former statute authorizing imposition of fines on contractors for carriage of mail to foreign countries, it was held that the power of the postmaster general to impose a fine on a contractor for the transmission of mails to and from foreign countries for any unreasonable or unnecessary delay in the departure of the mails, or in the performance of the trips, was limited to the cases and for the causes specified in the act.<sup>71</sup> Furthermore, it was held that a recommendation made by the postmaster general to the secretary of the navy to make a deduction from the pay of a contractor, on the ground that a portion of the service was performed by a steamer not of the class stipulated for in the contract, was not the imposition of a fine, within the terms of that act.<sup>72</sup>

h. Overpayments and Recovery Thereof

Under a statute providing for the recovery of wrongful or fraudulent payments of compensation, overpayments which have been made in consequence of fraudulent representations, or under a mistake of fact, or by reason of misconstruction or misapprehension of the law by an officer of the department, may be recovered.

Under a statute providing for the recovery of wrongful or fraudulent payments of compensation, it has been held that, where overpayments have been made to mail contractors in consequence of fraudulent representations,<sup>73</sup> or under a mistake of fact,<sup>74</sup> or by reason of misconstruction or misapprehension of the law by an officer of the department,<sup>75</sup> they may be recovered in an action by the government,<sup>76</sup> or the money so paid out may be deducted from other money due the payee,<sup>77</sup> without waiting for the amount of the overpayments to be ascertained by suit,<sup>78</sup> or a counterclaim therefor may be set up in an action by the contractor to recover compensation due him.<sup>79</sup> In this way, a multiplicity of suits and circuitry of action are avoided.<sup>80</sup> However, the statute does not extend to a case where an additional allowance was not in excess of the maximum permitted, where no fraud is shown on the part of the contractor or of a post office employee, and where there was no mistake of fact.<sup>81</sup>

Estoppel. The inaction of the post office department during a long period does not furnish any estoppel against the government.<sup>82</sup>

Actions. Rules governing actions for recovery of payments generally apply to actions against mail contractors to recover money obtained by them fraudulently or through mistake.<sup>83</sup>

i. Waiver of, or Estoppel to Claim, Compensation

A mail contractor may waive, or be estopped to claim, compensation.

A mail contractor accepting compensation for services at a certain rate without objection will be held to have assented to such rate and cannot recover more than the sum so accepted,<sup>84</sup> and he cannot recover on an implied contract for a greater amount.<sup>85</sup> So also, it has been held that, where service, whether rightly or wrongfully, is demanded as mail service and is rendered and paid for as such without protest, the contractor waives any right to additional pay.<sup>86</sup> Furthermore, where a mail contractor renders service within the route of another contractor, and allows the latter to receive pay therefor from the government, without objection, he is estopped to call on the government for payment.<sup>87</sup> On the other hand, where a mail carrier has no means of knowing the amount of compensation to which he is entitled, and accepts what is paid to him on the assurance that it is the full amount of the agreed compensation, he is not concluded by his acquiescence,<sup>88</sup> and a mail contractor carrying mails between the post office and trains transporting it, who performs under protest services which should have been performed by the railroad company, is entitled to recover from it the value of the services so performed, the services not being performed without expectation of pay on his part.<sup>89</sup> The filing of an application for increased rates with the Interstate Commerce Commission has been held to be a sufficient protest against existing rates.<sup>90</sup>

Evidence of waiver. The fact that a railroad company has claimed and been awarded compen-

§ 31. Carriage and Delivery of Mails

- a. In general
- b. Arrival and departure of mails; frequency of service
- c. Delivery
- d. Rights, duties, and liabilities of carriers and contractors
- e. Liability of government for lost mail

a. In General

Congress has full constitutional power to reserve to the postal department a monopoly of the business of receiving, transmitting, and delivering mails.

Congress has full constitutional power to reserve to the postal department a monopoly of the business of receiving, transmitting, and delivering mails,<sup>92</sup> and by statutes the monopoly of carrying the mails is secured to the post office department.<sup>93</sup> In so doing the government is engaged in the discharge of a governmental function,<sup>94</sup> and it has assumed exclusive charge and carriage of the mails, prohibiting anyone other than the government from engaging therein.<sup>95</sup> Nevertheless, this monopoly extends only to letters, packets of letters, and like mailable matter, and not to the transportation of merchandise in parcels or packages of such a character as might be carried through the mails;<sup>96</sup>

and it has been said that congress perhaps lacks the constitutional power to create such a monopoly.<sup>97</sup> In accordance with general rules the courts have held that these statutes must be construed strictly because they are penal statutes<sup>98</sup> and also because they are in derogation of common right,<sup>99</sup> although there are opinions of the attorney general in which the opposite conclusion has been reached.<sup>1</sup>

Power to detain letters. Where the statutes merely provide for the enforcement of penalties against unauthorized carriers of letters on the mail routes, it is not competent for the post office department to detain a bag containing letters carried on a mail route contrary to law.<sup>2</sup>

Mailed matter as property. The United States has a property right in the mails<sup>3</sup> and has a direct interest in protecting the property it has in the transportation of the mails.<sup>4</sup> By postal regulations the rights of the addressee or sender as to a mailed letter prior to its delivery have been settled.<sup>5</sup> Under these regulations a writer or sender may now apply for a letter, which is put in the mail, and when it is properly identified, the postmaster must return it to him, or telegraph to the post office of the addressee, whose postmaster must return it to the post office where mailed, if it has not been delivered.<sup>6</sup>

b. Arrival and Departure of Mails; Frequency of Service

It rests altogether in the discretion of the postmaster

Prior conflict

(1) There have been decisions holding that a mailed letter prior to its delivery is the property of the addressee.—Kennedy v. Dr. David Kennedy Corp., 66 N.Y.S. 225, 32 Misc. 480—50 C.J. p 737 note 27 [b], [d].

(2) There are also decisions holding that such a letter is the property of the sender.—U. S. v. Bullington, C.C.Ala., 170 F. 121—50 C.J. p 737 note 27 [c].

general, where the power has been conferred on him by congress, to determine at what hours the mail shall leave particular places and arrive at others and to determine whether it shall leave the same place only once or more frequently.

It rests altogether in the discretion of the postmaster general, where the power has been conferred on him by congress, to determine at what hours the mail shall leave particular places and arrive at others<sup>7</sup> and to determine whether it shall leave the same place only once a day or more frequently.<sup>8</sup> His decision is absolute when the discretion is committed to him by the laws of the United States, and cannot be controlled by a state or by the courts.<sup>9</sup> However, under a contract for carrying the mails between two points agreeably to a schedule appended which regulates the time of arrival and departure only at the ends of the route, the postmaster general cannot require the contractor to deliver the mails at an intermediate point at a particular hour of the day, since this would be the making of a new schedule, while the postmaster general has power only to change the schedule.<sup>10</sup>

c. Delivery

Postmasters are under the obligation to care for and deliver mail which comes into their hands, and if a letter has been delivered to the person to whom it is directed, or to his authorized agent, all authority of the government over the letter and responsibility therefor is at an end.

Postmasters are under obligation to care for and deliver mail which comes into their hands<sup>11</sup> in so far as possible to the individual,<sup>12</sup> firm,<sup>13</sup> or corporation<sup>14</sup> for whom it is intended.

Enjoining delivery of mail. Where conflicting claims are set up in respect of letters addressed to a firm which has ceased to exist, the postmaster may be enjoined from delivering the letters until it shall be finally ascertained by the court who is legally entitled to them.<sup>15</sup> However, the court has no power to command the postmaster "to refrain from withholding" the letters from plaintiffs in such a suit.<sup>16</sup> Generally, where an injunction is sought to prevent delivery of mails in case of conflicting claims thereto, the court will not grant an injunction unless the party seeking it demonstrates by the evidence that he has a clear right to receive the mail<sup>17</sup> and that failure of the post office department to deliver it to him impairs a substantial right.<sup>18</sup> Furthermore, a court will not interfere with a ruling of the post office department as to delivery of mail in case of conflicting claim thereto unless palpable error appears.<sup>19</sup>

Effect of delivery. While any letter which gets into the mails is within the protection of the United States from the time it is received by the postal authorities until its possession is surrendered voluntarily and rightfully to the one entitled to receive it,<sup>20</sup> if a letter has been delivered to the person to whom it is directed, or to his authorized agent, all authority of the government over the letter and responsibility therefor is at an end;<sup>21</sup> and such is the case where a letter is surrendered to the writer thereof on demand therefor by him at any time before it is placed in transit.<sup>22</sup> Beyond the protection of the mail while discharging the functions of postal service with respect to it the federal government has no rightful power or legal concern.<sup>23</sup>

d. Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Carriers and Contractors

- (1) Exemption from arrest
- (2) Lost, stolen, or delayed mail
- (3) Loss of mail equipment

(1) Exemption from Arrest

A mail carrier is exempt from arrest on civil process while engaged in such service, but the rule is different where the process is issued on a charge of felony.

While a mail carrier is exempt, as a matter of public policy, from arrest on civil process while engaged in such service,<sup>24</sup> the rule is different where the process is issued on a charge of felony<sup>25</sup> or other criminal offense affecting the public welfare.<sup>26</sup>

(2) Lost, Stolen, or Delayed Mail

- (a) Liability to individuals
- (b) Liability to the government

(a) Liability to Individuals

While persons or corporations carrying the mails are not common carriers in respect of such service, and as such liable to the senders or addressees of lost or stolen mail, individuals or railroad companies carrying the mails may be liable for a loss caused by negligence or misfeasance.

Neither persons<sup>27</sup> nor corporations<sup>28</sup> carrying the mails under contract with the government, nor corporations carrying mails not under contract but by compulsion of statute,<sup>29</sup> are common carriers in respect of such service, and as such liable to the senders or addressees of lost or stolen mail delivered to them for carriage or those subrogated to their rights, but are public agents of the United States, employed to perform a governmental function.<sup>30</sup> The fact that a corporation is a common carrier of goods for the public as well as a contractor with the government for carrying the mails does not transform it into a common carrier as to the mails.<sup>31</sup> So also, contractors for the carriage of the mails, whether individuals<sup>32</sup> or corporations,<sup>33</sup> are not private carriers of the mails and liable to individuals as such, since they do not carry for individuals or receive any compensation from them.<sup>34</sup> An individual member of the public is not a party to a contract between the government and a person or corporation for carrying mail,<sup>35</sup> and such a contract is not made for his benefit,<sup>36</sup> although there is an indirect benefit or interest in the addressee or sender in the performance of the contract.<sup>37</sup> However, such indirect benefit or interest is too indirect to make him a privy to the contract, so as to have a right of action thereon<sup>38</sup> or to justify a suit under the mail contract in his own right without the consent of the United States.<sup>39</sup> Furthermore, where suit by the United States on the contract is authorized and such authorization is subsequently revoked, suit cannot be brought in the name of the United States on behalf of the senders of the mail and their private insurers.<sup>40</sup>

On theory of relationship of master and servant. The relationship of master and servant does not exist between the sender or addressee of mail matter and a railroad company carrying the mails under contract with the government or under requirements of constitution or statute so as to render the company liable for loss of mail to the addressee, since neither the sender nor the addressee has any control over the railroad company in the handling of mail matter.<sup>41</sup>

For negligence or misfeasance of contractor or carrier or his agents or servants. Individuals who contract with the government to carry the mails are liable to the addressees or sendees of mail delivered to them for transportation for a loss thereof caused by their own negligence, misfeasance, or default in the discharge of their duties.<sup>42</sup> Although there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>43</sup> the better rule is that an individual contractor for the carriage of the mails is not liable to the owners of letters lost by the negligence of a carrier employed by him, where the contractor has used proper care in employing persons of suitable skill and diligence,<sup>44</sup> or for the theft of a letter by such carrier,<sup>45</sup> these decisions proceeding on the principle that the carrier employed by the contractor acts as a public agent in the discharge of a public duty and not as a mere servant of the contractor who employs him,<sup>46</sup> and that he alone is liable for loss or injury caused by his negligence or misfeasance.<sup>47</sup> Thus, in case of theft by the carrier, it has been held that an additional reason for holding the contractor not liable is that, even if the carrier were considered an agent of the contractor and would be liable for his acts within the scope of his employment, the contractor would not be liable for his crimes.<sup>48</sup>

Railroad companies. The decisions relating to the liability of a railroad company to the sender or addressee of mail matter, or one subrogated to their rights, are conflicting. On the one hand, there is authority to the effect that a railroad company carrying mails owes no duty whatever to the sender, addressee, or owner of the contents of any letter or package contained in the mails which can be made the basis of an action at law.<sup>49</sup> Furthermore it has been held that railway employees when handling mail are agents of the United States for whose negligence the railroad is not liable.<sup>50</sup> On the other hand, it has been held that a railroad company carrying the mails, whether under contract or by compulsion, is a public agent of the United States employed in performing a government function, and as such is liable to the owner of mails lost through its negligence or to those subrogated to his rights,<sup>51</sup> but that it is not liable for the negligent or tortious acts of its employees, subagents, or subordinates, in the selection of whom it has exercised ordinary care.<sup>52</sup> However, there is authority to the contrary of this last proposition, it being held that the status of a railroad company carrying mails under contract with the government is that of bailee for hire, and that it is liable to the sender of mail for the loss or theft thereof caused through the negligence or want of care of its agents or servants employed in the general business of transportation, and not for the special business of transporting the mails.<sup>53</sup>

(b) Liability to the Government

While railroad or steamship companies carrying the mails are not liable as common or private carriers, they are liable as government agents.

Railroad or steamboat companies carrying the mails, either by virtue of contract or statutory requirement, are neither common<sup>54</sup> nor private<sup>55</sup>

(3) Loss of Mail Equipment

A railroad company carrying the mail under a contract may be liable for the loss of mail equipment.

A railroad company carrying the mails under a contract providing that, in consideration of the payment of a stipulated sum for the service, it would "accept and perform the service upon the conditions prescribed by law and the regulations of the department," may be liable to the United States for the loss of mail equipment directly caused by the negligence of its employees.<sup>64</sup>

§ 32. — Undelivered Letters and Request for Return

In complying with a statute which provides that the postmaster general may direct publication of a list of undelivered letters at any post office in a regularly published newspaper which has the largest circulation within the post-office delivery, the postmaster general is the only judge as to what paper has the largest circulation. Under a statute requiring the return of an uncalled-for letter to the writer, where there is a return address, a presumption may arise that the postmaster has discharged his duty.

In complying with a statute which provides that the postmaster general may direct publication of a list of undelivered letters at any post office, in the newspaper, regularly published, within the post office delivery which has the largest circulation within such delivery, the postmaster general is the only judge as to which paper has the largest circulation.<sup>66</sup> A newspaper publisher has no cause of action against a postmaster for refusing to give him the publication of a list of uncalled-for letters,<sup>67</sup> even though the refusal is malicious.<sup>68</sup> A refractory postmaster, it has been said, can be dealt with only by complaint to a superior or perhaps to a grand jury.<sup>69</sup> Under a statute requiring the return of an uncalled-for letter to the writer, where he has indorsed on the outside thereof his name and address without additional charge for postage, if such letter is not returned it has been held that the postmaster is presumed to have discharged his duty by delivering the letter to the addressee in person or by mail where the postmaster at the place of delivery knew the whereabouts of the addressee and the letter had a return address on it and was not returned to the sender as required by the statute.<sup>70</sup>

§ 33. The Franking Privilege

"penalty envelope,"<sup>72</sup> has been conferred on certain persons by virtue of which they may transmit certain matter through the mail free of postage.<sup>73</sup> The franking privilege exists only in favor of those who are within the terms of the statutes.<sup>74</sup> Under a statute,<sup>39</sup> U.S.C.A. § 321, granting the franking privilege to matter relating to official business, the privilege exists in favor of officers of the United States government,<sup>75</sup> and this privilege extends to all officers of the United States, whether or not departmental,<sup>76</sup> regardless of where they are located,<sup>77</sup> although under earlier statutes the privilege was restricted to officers of the government located at the seat of government.<sup>78</sup>

Parcel post matter. The phrase in the statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 321, referring to "any letters, packages, or other matter relating exclusively to the business of the Government," is broad enough to cover any class thereafter established.<sup>79</sup> Thus penalty envelopes and labels may be used in sending, by parcel post, fourth-class mail matter not exceeding in weight the limit fixed by statute.<sup>80</sup>

Duty to furnish and prepare envelopes. The statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 321, does not impose on the executive departments at Washington the duty of furnishing penalty envelopes to the various subordinate officers throughout the United States who are under their supervision, but whose offices are not offices in those departments, except in cases where that duty is required by other statutory provisions.<sup>81</sup> However, where the envelopes are not furnished by the departments, they may be prepared for their own use by the officers authorized to use them.<sup>82</sup> The express provision of the statute that every letter or package relating to the business of the government of the United States must be indorsed with the proper designation of the office from which it is transmitted with a statement of the penalty imposed by the statute for an unlawful use of the envelope does not require that the penalty on the envelopes should be printed rather than written.<sup>83</sup>

Penalty envelopes used by Philippine Islands. Congress having intended that the government for the Philippine Islands should be regarded as a branch of the war department, the penalty envelopes used for the transmission of official mail from those islands were, accordingly, required to bear the indorsement of the war department.<sup>84</sup>

Free registration of letters or packets. Construing the provision of statute, 39 U.S.C.A. § 384, that any letters or packets relating to the official business of the post office department may be registered "by any of the executive departments or bureaus" thereof without the payment of any registry fee, it has been held that a department officer, who in the course of public business is called temporarily to discharge his official duties at some place away from the seat of government, during such absence and for such duties, comes within the meaning of the words "Executive Departments, or Bureaus thereof," and, in the discharge of his duties, is entitled to make use of the facilities of registry without the payment of a fee;<sup>85</sup> but the statute does not embrace subordinate officers of the government permanently and regularly located elsewhere than in Washington.<sup>86</sup> Although the statute is no longer in force, the privilege of free registration was at one time, by express statutory provision, extended to pension agents.<sup>87</sup>

Members elect of congress; unseated members. Members elect of either house of congress may exercise the franking privilege from the commencement of their term, although no session has actually been called, and they have not therefore been able to take the oath of office,<sup>88</sup> but a member who has been unseated has no right thereafter to exercise the privilege.<sup>89</sup>

partments legally designable as chief clerks, whether of the departments proper or of the bureaus therein, to enjoy free communications.<sup>91</sup>

IV. OFFENSES AGAINST POSTAL LAWS

§ 34. In General

The particular statutory offenses against the postal laws, with the adjective rules of law applicable thereto, are considered infra §§ 35-64.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 35. Obstructing Passage of Mail

The statute making it a criminal offense knowingly and willfully to obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or its carrier, applies only to persons who know that the acts performed will obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or its carrier, and who perform them with the intention that such shall be their operation.

The statute making it a criminal offense knowingly and willfully to obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or its carrier, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1701, is not unconstitutional.<sup>93</sup> The statute applies only to persons who know that the acts performed will obstruct or retard the passage of the mail, or its carrier, and who perform them with the intention that such shall be their operation;<sup>94</sup> but when the acts which create the obstruction are in themselves unlawful the intention to obstruct will be imputed to their author, although the attainment of other ends may have been his primary object.<sup>95</sup> The statute has no reference to acts lawful in themselves, from the execution of which a temporary delay to the mails unavoidably follows;<sup>96</sup> and if an obstruction is necessarily caused thereby it is not a crime.<sup>97</sup> By the term "passage of the mails" is meant the transmission of mail matter from the time it is deposited in a place designated by law or by the rules of the post office department up to the time it is delivered to the person to whom it is addressed.<sup>98</sup>

Although obstruction of the mails is a statutory offense, the government may obtain an injunction against a continuing obstruction and enforce it by proceedings in contempt.<sup>99</sup>

§ 36. Conveyance of Mail Matter Out of Mail

- a. In general
- b. Over post route
- c. By private express

a. In General

Within the statute prohibiting the collecting, receiving, or carrying of any letter or packet contrary to law by anyone concerned in carrying the mails, a letter is a message in writing and a packet is two or more letters under one cover. The conveyance or transmission of letters or packets by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only, is not prohibited.

Within the statute prohibiting the collecting, receiving, or carrying of any letter or packet, or causing or procuring the same to be done contrary to law, by anyone concerned in carrying the mails, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1693, a letter is a message in writing<sup>1</sup> and a packet is two or more letters under one cover,<sup>2</sup> but not a package containing other articles.<sup>3</sup> The fact that a letter relating to the package accompanies it does not constitute a violation of the statute, where a further statute excepts from its operation the carrying of letters to the person to whom the package is intended to be delivered.<sup>4</sup>

In accordance with express statutory provisions, whoever, having charge or control of a conveyance which regularly performs trips on any post route or from one place to another between which the mail is carried, carries otherwise than in the mail letters or packets, except those of a particular nature, is guilty of an offense.

In accordance with express statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1694, whoever, having charge or control of a conveyance which regularly performs trips on any post route or from one place to another between which the mail is carried, carries otherwise than in the mail letters or packets, except those of a particular nature, is guilty of an offense.<sup>6</sup> A letter or order, although unsealed, directing merchandise to be sent by the return boat as a commercial transaction is within the prohibition of the statute.<sup>7</sup> The persons designated in the statute are not guilty of the offense therein described unless the letters or packets are carried with their knowledge and consent.<sup>8</sup>

Current business of carrier. The statute creates an exception with respect to letters or packets which relate to the current business of the carrier, and as used in the statute, the phrase "current business of the carrier" means that business which is, at any particular time, in the present course of the carrier's transactions.<sup>9</sup> In order that a carrier may avail himself of the benefit of the exception, it is essential: (1) That the letters should be the letters of the carrier itself, that is to say, letters written by or addressed to the carrier.<sup>10</sup> (2) That they should relate to its own current business.<sup>11</sup>

The statute does not permit free transportation of letters and packets belonging to railroads or persons other than the carrier,<sup>12</sup> whether such letters or packets relate to the current business of the carrier<sup>13</sup> or to the business of the railroad for which the letters or packets are carried.<sup>14</sup>

c. By Private Express

In accordance with provisions of the statute, one who establishes a private express, one of the purposes of which is the carrying of letters or packets over a post route, and one who carries a letter or packet in his private express are guilty of offenses.

In accordance with provisions of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1696, which has been upheld as constitutional,<sup>15</sup> one who establishes a private express, one of the purposes of which is the carrying of letters or packets over a post route,<sup>16</sup> and one who carries a letter or packet in his private express,<sup>17</sup> whether carried with or without distinct compensation,<sup>18</sup> are guilty of offenses. "Letters or packets" within the meaning of the statute include communications in writing conveyed from one person to another,<sup>19</sup> and do not include a package of merchandise which by reason of its weight and character might lawfully be transmitted through the mails.<sup>20</sup> The statute does not prohibit private express companies making regular trips over established post routes from engaging in the business of carrying such parcels for hire.<sup>21</sup>

If the mail is actually carried over a railroad under the authority of the post office department, with the assent of, and by an arrangement with, the railroad corporation, this is sufficient to constitute the railroad a post route within the meaning of the statute, although there is no formal written contract.<sup>22</sup> Letter-carrier routes are post routes in the meaning of the statute,<sup>23</sup> but the streets of a city for which no free delivery of mail matter is provided are not post routes,<sup>24</sup> and the statute does not prohibit its citizens from arranging with a private agency for the carriage and delivery of their mail matter within the city, including sealed letters on which no United States postage has been paid.<sup>25</sup>

'Regular trips or at stated periods.' Provision for a delivery daily, once, twice, or thrice, as the case may be, over the streets of a city, wherever mentioned, is a provision for a delivery "by regular trips or at stated periods," within the prohibition of the statute.<sup>26</sup>

Liability for acts of agents. The owner of a private express is not liable for any acts of his agents which were not authorized by him either expressly or impliedly,<sup>27</sup> but if his instructions are in general terms not to carry any mailable matter and he still assented to, or approved of, the carrying of what was mailable, he violates the statute whether or not he knew that the statute embraced such matter.<sup>28</sup>

Evidence and trial. General rules of evidence<sup>29</sup> and trial<sup>30</sup> in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for this offense.

37. Mailing Unmailable Matter Generally

Under express statutory provisions, it is an offense to deposit in the mails a letter containing a threat to injure another with intent to extort money, matter tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination, matter containing a threat to injure the president of the United States, or nonmailable matter with intent to kill or injure another person.

Under express statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. § 876, it is an offense knowingly to deposit or cause to be deposited in any authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post office establishment of the United States, with intent to extort money, any letter addressed to any other person containing any threat to injure the person of the addressee or of another.<sup>31</sup> Where there are two or more defendants, it is sufficient, under the statute, if one of the defendants mailed, and the other or others caused him to mail, the letter,<sup>32</sup> or if all of the defendants caused a third person to mail the letter.<sup>33</sup>

Matter tending to incite arson, murder, etc. While, in the absence of statute so providing, the mailing of matter counseling murder, arson, or treason may not constitute an offense against the United States,<sup>34</sup> by statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461, it is an offense against the United States to mail matter of a character tending to incite arson, murder, or assassination.<sup>35</sup> In construing this statute, it has been held that, if articles in a newspaper sent through the mails have a tendency to incite murder or assassination, it is not necessary to constitute the offense to show any specific intent on the part of accused in writing, publishing, or mailing them,<sup>36</sup> or that accused knew that the articles were of a character tending to incite murder or assassination,<sup>37</sup> he being confessedly familiar with the contents thereof.

Where an indictment alleges that a newspaper contained matter of a character to incite, in the minds of persons reading it, murder and assassination, and also sets out the objectionable language in full, the additional particular averment that it was so nonmailable is not required.<sup>38</sup> An indictment, alleging that accused knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously deposited in the post office a newspaper containing matter intended to incite murder and assassination is sufficient, without specifically alleging that he knew that the paper contained matter intending to incite murder and assassination<sup>39</sup> or comprehended its import.<sup>40</sup>

Matter containing threat to injure president. In order to constitute a violation of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 871, which makes it an offense for any person knowingly and willfully to deposit or cause to be deposited for conveyance any letter, paper, writing, print, missive, or document containing "any threat to take the life of or to inflict bodily harm upon the President of the United States," it is necessary that the writer intended that the

Mailing or delivery of nonmailable matter with intent to kill or injure another. The statute relating to the offense of depositing for mail or delivery by mail of certain nonmailable matter with intent to kill or injure another, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1716, creates two distinct offenses, one of which consists in depositing or causing to be deposited the non-mailable matter<sup>42</sup> and the other in delivering it or causing it to be delivered.<sup>43</sup>

Where the offense charged is depositing, or causing to be deposited for mailing and delivery, poison with intent to kill, etc., a designated person, it is not necessary to allege that the letter deposited for mailing was sent to any particular person, or at what point or post office it was addressed.<sup>44</sup> Where the offense alleged in the indictment is causing to be delivered by mail poison to a designated person with intent to injure him, it is sufficient to show a violation of the statute in this respect.<sup>45</sup> The indictment may also be so drawn as to include both offenses.<sup>46</sup> A conviction under the statute cannot be had on an indictment charging a violation of a postal regulation relating to the transmission through the mails of a composition containing poison, but held insufficient because the regulation was beyond the jurisdiction of the postmaster general.<sup>47</sup>

Mailing prize-fight films. Under a statute, now repealed, which prohibited the depositing of prize-fight films in the mails, it was held that a transportation by mail was not necessary to the offense.<sup>48</sup>

§ 38. Mailing Obscene, Lewd, or Lascivious Matter

a. In general

- b. Elements of offense
- c. Persons liable

a. In General

In accordance with statutory provisions, it is an offense knowingly to deposit for mailing or delivery any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character.

In accordance with statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461, which have been upheld as constitutional<sup>49</sup> and a valid exercise of the power to establish a postal system,<sup>50</sup> it is an offense knowingly to deposit for mailing or delivery any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character.<sup>51</sup> The substance of the offense is the employment of, or attempt to employ, the mails for the transmission of obscene matter,<sup>52</sup> and, since the statute is applicable only to use of the mails, it is not objectionable as prohibiting the deposit of such matter in private depositories or other places over which congress has no control.<sup>53</sup> The purpose of the statute is to prevent the use of the mails to circulate or deliver matter to corrupt the morals of people.<sup>54</sup>

Construction of the statute must be reasonable, having regard to the manifest object had in view in its enactment,<sup>55</sup> but inasmuch as it is highly penal it cannot be construed to include acts not fairly within its letter and spirit.<sup>56</sup> It is not to be construed only by the specific words used in the statute, but its meaning must be arrived at from the general language used, the circumstances under which the thing was written, and in the light of the purposes of the particular act and evils sought to be remedied by its passage.<sup>57</sup> The words "obscene, lewd, or lascivious," as used in the statute, describe one and the same offense<sup>58</sup> and signify that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity.<sup>59</sup> The words have the same meaning as is given to them at common law<sup>60</sup> in prosecutions for obscene libel.<sup>61</sup>

Matter inclosed in envelope or wrapper. The mailing of a sealed letter containing obscene matter in an envelope on which nothing appears but the name and address of the sender is a violation of the statute,<sup>62</sup> but the mailing of such sealed letters addressed to the sender himself is not an offense.<sup>63</sup> Books,<sup>64</sup> newspapers,<sup>65</sup> writings,<sup>66</sup> or other publications<sup>67</sup> of an obscene, lewd, or lascivious character are not rendered mailable by sealing them in envelopes or otherwise wrapping them up.

Film. Exposed film, although undeveloped, constitutes a picture or print within the meaning of the statute,<sup>68</sup> and hence the mailing of an exposed film which on being developed will reveal pictures of an obscene or lewd character is a violation of the statute.<sup>69</sup>

Matter objectionable in part only. In order to constitute an offense under the statute it is not essential that the entire contents of the matter mailed should be nonmailable;<sup>70</sup> nor is it essential to the commission of the offense that the offender's responsibility for its being put in the mail should extend to its entire contents.<sup>71</sup>

Use of decoy letters. It is not an objection to a conviction of sending obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter through the mail that the matter was sent in response to a decoy letter written by a government officer.<sup>72</sup>

b. Elements of Offense

In order to constitute a violation of the statute the matter sent by mail must have a tendency to corrupt and deprave the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences. Knowledge of the contents of the matter mailed is a necessary element of the offense, but if the contents are known to the sender intent is immaterial.

In order to constitute a violation of the statute the matter sent by mail must have a tendency to corrupt and deprave the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences and into whose hands it may fall by arousing or implanting in such minds lewd or lascivious thoughts or sexual desires,<sup>73</sup> or the matter must be such as may be characterized as filthy.<sup>74</sup> The mere fact that the writing is concerned with matters pertaining to the sexes or with sexual relations is not sufficient to bring it within the statute,<sup>75</sup> and so the mailing of serious works of physiology, medicine, science, and sex instruction expressed in decent language ordinarily do not vio-

Advocacy of plural marriages

Editorials advocating restoration of celestial or plural marriages because God allegedly has restored the principle thereof, did not contain obscene, lewd or lascivious matter within the statute.—U. S. v. Barlow, D.C.Utah, 56 F.Supp. 795, appeal dismissed 65 S.Ct. 25, 323 U.S. 805, 89 L.Ed. 642.

74. Corruption of minds and morals

(1) Letters characterized as filthy under a statute which declares unmailable "every obscene, lewd, or lascivious, and every filthy book . . . letter" etc., are unmailable although they are not calculated to corrupt the addressee's minds and morals.—U. S. v. Limehouse, S.C., 52 S.Ct. 412, 285 U.S. 424, 76 L.Ed. 843—U. S. v. Dempsey, D.C.Ark., 188 F. 450.

(2) The actual effect on the mind of the recipient is immaterial.—Verner v. U. S., C.A.Wash., 183 F.2d 184.

Letter held filthy within statute—U.S.—Verner v. U. S., supra.

75. U.S.—U. S. v. Goldstein, D.C.N. J., 73 F.Supp. 875.

late the statute<sup>76</sup> unless the publication is such as will so arouse the salacity of the reader as to outweigh any literary, scientific, or other merits it may possess.<sup>77</sup> The statute is not violated by mailing matter which is coarse, vulgar, indecent, abusive, scurrilous, or even libelous,<sup>78</sup> unless the matter may be characterized as filthy.<sup>79</sup> The fact that language is libelous will not take it out of the inhibition of the statute, if it is otherwise of such a character as to bring it within the meaning of the statute.<sup>80</sup>

Nature of words used. In order to justify a conviction under the statute it is not essential that the letter or publication alleged to be nonmailable be in any particular words,<sup>81</sup> but its evil character may appear in the structure of the sentences, and either directly or indirectly by innuendo or suggestion, or in the thought conveyed.<sup>82</sup> While there is some authority to the contrary,<sup>83</sup> the better view is that, where the necessary inference from the words in the matter mailed is obscene, it is not essential to constitute the offense that the words used were themselves obscene.<sup>84</sup> Nevertheless, if the letter or publication is in itself unobjectionable on its face, the sender cannot be convicted on an undisclosed motive or intent.<sup>85</sup>

Knowledge, intent, or motive. Knowledge of the contents of the letters, writing, publication, etc., deposited for mailing or delivery at the time of so depositing them is an indispensable element of the offense denounced by the statute.<sup>86</sup> If matter so deposited is of a nonmailable character and the contents thereof are known to the sender, he is guilty of a violation of the statute regardless of his intent or motive in sending it,<sup>87</sup> and, accordingly, it is not a defense that his motive was good.<sup>88</sup> It is not material that the sender did not regard the matter to be of the character forbidden by statute to be carried through the mails.<sup>89</sup>

Prepayment of postage. Prepayment of postage is not a constituent of the offense of sending obscene matter through the mail,<sup>90</sup> there being no statutory requirement to that effect.<sup>91</sup>

Depositing in mail. It is an indispensable element of the offense that the nonmailable matter be deposited for mailing and delivery.<sup>92</sup> When the other elements of the offense are present, the offense is completed by depositing the nonmailable matter in the mail,<sup>93</sup> and it is not necessary to constitute the offense that the matter should be delivered to the sender or to any other person.<sup>94</sup>

c. Persons Liable

Corporations, as well as individuals, may be guilty of the offense of depositing an obscene publication in the mail. It is not essential to a conviction that the accused personally deposited the nonmailable matter in the mail; it is sufficient if the act was done with his authorization, or with his knowledge and consent.

Corporations, as well as individuals, may be guilty of the offense of depositing an obscene publication in the mail.<sup>95</sup> It is not essential to the offense of mailing nonmailable matter that it should have been personally deposited in the mail by accused himself.<sup>96</sup> It is sufficient if the act was authorized by him<sup>97</sup> or that it was committed with his knowledge and acquiescence;<sup>98</sup> and it has even been held that he may be liable if the objectionable matter is deposited in the mail as a natural and probable consequence of an act intentionally done by him with knowledge that such will be its natural and probable effect.<sup>99</sup>

Aider or abettor. It has been held that one who prepares for another an obscene communication knowing that he will deposit it in the mail may be indicted and convicted as a principal under a statute providing that whoever directly commits any act constituting an offense defined in any law of the United States or aids, abets, induces, or procures its commission is a principal.<sup>1</sup>

§ 39. — Indictment

- a. In general
- b. Setting out obscene matter
- c. Knowledge of contents of matter mailed
- d. Issues, proof, and variance

a. In General

The indictment must be sufficiently definite to advise the accused of the charge and to enable him to avail himself of his conviction or acquittal as a protection against further prosecution for the same offense.

Under the general rules the indictment must disclose the nature of the offense with sufficient definiteness to advise accused with what he is charged and to enable him to avail himself of his conviction or acquittal as a protection against further prosecution for the same offense.<sup>2</sup> It is sufficient to allege that the publication mailed was "obscene, lewd, and lascivious" without adding "and of an indecent character,"<sup>3</sup> but the addition of the word "indecent" will not render the indictment bad.<sup>4</sup>

While it has been held that an indictment for sending through the mail obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter will be sufficient if it describes the particular matter so as to identify it and then allege in the language of the statute that it was of the character therein described,<sup>5</sup> it has also been held necessary that the indictment should allege that the matter mailed was of the character declared nonmailable by the statute and that it is not sufficient merely to set out a copy of the matter mailed, leaving its nonmailable character to be inferred therefrom,<sup>6</sup> and that an indictment defective in this respect is not cured by the conclusion of a subsequent count "contrary to the form of the statute."<sup>7</sup> In accordance with the rule that it is not essential to the commission of the offense that the entire contents of the publication be objectionable, it is not necessary for the indictment to allege that the entire publication containing the alleged nonmailable matter was nonmailable.<sup>8</sup>

It has been held that an indictment sufficiently charges that defendant deposited an obscene letter in the post office "for mailing and delivery," although not in that precise language, where the plain and reasonable meaning of the language used was that such was the purpose with which the letter was deposited in the post office.<sup>9</sup> It will not be sufficient to allege in general terms that newspapers containing obscene matter were "deposited for mailing and delivery,"<sup>10</sup> it must be alleged that the newspapers were addressed or that direction was given for mailing or delivery.<sup>11</sup>

Innuendo. It is not necessary to add anything by way of innuendo to an indictment which sets out the articles alleged to be nonmailable, if no meaning

the mails alleged nonmailable pictures, the indictment need not refer to the entire publication of which the pictures were only a portion, the language accompanying the pictures not being alleged to be obscene and it only being necessary that the jury should consider so much of the context as is essential to a proper understanding of what is claimed to be in violation of the statute.—*Tyomies Pub. for the language is claimed except such as it would convey to any ordinary reader.<sup>12</sup>

Matter of defense. Since the statute contains no exceptions to the rule making obscene publications nonmailable, the fact that a publication which would ordinarily be classed as within its meaning might lawfully be sent to certain persons does not render it necessary to aver in the indictment that it was not sent to such persons, it being matter of defense to show that it was sent to such persons.<sup>13</sup>

The indictment may omit the obscene matter as being of such a character as is not proper to be spread upon the records of the court, provided the crime charged is described sufficiently to inform the accused of the nature of the charge against him.

The constitutional right of accused to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him is not infringed by the omission from the indictment of indecent and obscene matter, alleged as not proper to be spread upon the records of the court,<sup>14</sup> provided the crime charged, however general the language used, is so described as reasonably to inform accused of the nature of the charge sought to be established against him;<sup>15</sup> and in such case accused may apply to the court before the trial is entered on for a bill of particulars, showing what parts of the paper would be relied on by the prosecution as being obscene, lewd, and lascivious, which motion will be granted or refused, as the court, in the exercise of a sound legal discretion, may find necessary to the ends of justice.<sup>16</sup> Nevertheless, if the indictment omits to set out the offensive matter as being of such a character as is not proper to be spread upon the records of the court, there should be sufficient in the indictment to describe the thing alleged to have been mailed and to distinguish it from other matter so that accused may be apprised with reasonable certainty of the identical matter which he is charged with having deposited in the mails.<sup>17</sup>

The indictment must contain an allegation that the accused had knowledge of the contents of the matter mailed at the time of mailing.

Since knowledge of the contents of the matter mailed at the time of mailing is an indispensable element of the offense, an indictment which contains no allegation of such knowledge is fatally defective.<sup>18</sup> It has been held that an allegation that accused "did unlawfully and knowingly deposit" in the mails certain obscene matter is insufficient for this purpose, if objection is taken on motion to quash before trial<sup>19</sup> or by demurrer;<sup>20</sup> but it has been held that an allegation that accused "unlawfully, wilfully and knowingly," "unlawfully and knowingly," or "knowingly" deposited certain obscene matter in the mail, if defective for the purpose of charging knowledge of the offensive character of the matter mailed, is at least sufficient after verdict,<sup>21</sup> the view being taken that the defect, if any, is one of form only.<sup>22</sup> An averment that accused knowingly deposited, in a post office for mailing, circulars giving information how, where, or by whom and by what means obscene, lewd, and lascivious books might be obtained, and that defendant unlawfully and knowingly meant and intended thereby to give such information, is a sufficient averment that defendant knew the character and contents of such circulars, and it is not necessary to set them out or further to characterize or describe the books referred to therein other than to aver that they are obscene, lewd, and lascivious.<sup>23</sup>

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance

General rules as to issues, proof, and variance apply in prosecutions for sending obscene matter through the mails.

§ 40. — Evidence

General rules of evidence in criminal cases apply in prosecutions for mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter.

In accordance with the rule in criminal cases generally, in a prosecution for mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter, the prosecution has the burden of proving every essential element of the offense.<sup>25</sup> Where the publication is of some scientific or literary value so that it could lawfully pass through the mails if directed to properly qualified persons, the prosecution must prove that accused has abused the conditional privilege which the law gives him.<sup>26</sup>

Admissibility. Rules for the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally are applicable in a prosecution for mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter.<sup>27</sup> Correspondence by a post office official carried on with accused through the mails for the sole purpose of obtaining evidence on which to base the prosecution is admissible.<sup>28</sup> Where the particular portions of the writing claimed to be obscene are marked, other portions thereof cannot be read in evidence;<sup>29</sup> nor can clauses of alleged similar character be read from other books by way of illustration.<sup>30</sup> Proof of the reputation for chastity of the addressee of the letter alleged to be nonmailable is irrelevant and inadmissible.<sup>31</sup> Evidence as to the effect of letters on the minds and conduct of the recipients thereof is not admissible on the issue whether the letters were obscene, lewd, or filthy.<sup>32</sup>

Weight and sufficiency of the evidence is governed by general rules.<sup>33</sup> The elements of the offense must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,<sup>34</sup> but they may be proved by circumstantial as well as direct evidence.<sup>35</sup> Failure to introduce the envelopes in which obscene matter was mailed does not necessarily constitute failure to prove that such matter was sent through the mails.<sup>36</sup>

§ 41. — Trial

General principles applicable in the trial of criminal cases apply in prosecutions for mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter.

In accordance with general principles applicable in the trial of criminal cases, as a general rule, in prosecutions for sending obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter through the mails, the question whether or not matter is "obscene," "lewd," or "lascivious" is one for the jury, under appropriate instructions from the court as to the meaning of these terms as contemplated by the statute under which the indictment was framed.<sup>37</sup> Nevertheless, it is for the court to determine in the first instance whether matter claimed to have been obscene, lewd, or lascivious is capable of having such tendency;<sup>38</sup> and if it has no such tendency,<sup>39</sup> or could not by any reasonable interpretation be held to come within the prohibition of that statute,<sup>40</sup> the court may so instruct the jury as a matter of law. A verdict for accused should not be directed if there is evidence to support the charge,<sup>41</sup> but the sufficiency of the General rules in criminal cases apply to the giving and refusing of instructions in prosecutions for this offense.<sup>43</sup>

§ 42. Information as to Obtaining Obscene, Lewd, or Lascivious Matter

Under the statute which makes it an offense to give information as to the obtaining of obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter by depositing or causing to be deposited for mailing or delivery any card, letter, or circular containing such information, the offense is complete when a card, letter, or circular giving such information is deposited in the mail.

It is made an offense by statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461, to give information directly or indirectly, where, how, from whom, or by what means, any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, writing, or other publication of an indecent character may be obtained by depositing or causing to be deposited for mailing or delivery any written or printed card, letter, or circular containing such information. The gist of the offense is the mailing of matter giving information of the character therein designated,<sup>44</sup> and the offense is complete when a card, letter, or circular giving such information is deposited in the mail.<sup>45</sup> The letter or circular giving the information need not describe the objectionable matter or state its character;<sup>46</sup> it is sufficient if the writing, although unobjectionable on its face, gives information as to where matter of the character specified in the statute can be obtained.<sup>47</sup> Also it is not necessary that an unlawful intent should exist as to any particular matter with respect to which the statute prohibits information to be given through the mails.<sup>48</sup>

Indictment. While it is proper in an indictment for this offense that the card, circular, or letter giving the information should be so described or set out as to identify the offense,<sup>49</sup> it is not necessary that the card, circular, or letter be set forth in full,<sup>50</sup> and it is not necessary that all the words constituting the information should be pleaded with the particularity used in cases for libel and forgery.<sup>51</sup> It will be sufficient to describe the character of the book, pamphlet, or picture of which information is given and leave further disclosures to the introduction of evidence.<sup>52</sup> It is not necessary to allege that an unlawful intent existed as to any particular objectionable matter<sup>53</sup> or to allege ownership or possession of the objectionable matter since this is not an offense under the statute,<sup>54</sup> although an allegation of ownership is proper merely as the statement of a fact tending to interpret a letter.<sup>55</sup> In like manner, it is not necessary to allege that the information was given to one who inquired for or desired it<sup>56</sup> or that the letter actually conveyed the prohibited information to a particular person or persons.<sup>57</sup>

Evidence and trial. General rules with respect to evidence<sup>58</sup> and trial<sup>59</sup> apply in prosecutions for this offense.

§ 43. Information as to Preventing Conception or Procuring Abortion

In accordance with express statutory provisions, it is an offense for a person to mail information relating to the prevention of conception or to the procurement of abortion.

In accordance with the express provisions of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1461, it is an offense for a person to mail a written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information directly or indirectly where, how, or from whom articles designed or intended to prevent conception or to produce abortion may be obtained,<sup>60</sup> or information as to where and by whom any act by any person of any kind for procuring or producing an abortion will be done or performed.<sup>61</sup> The statute must be given a reasonable construction.<sup>62</sup>

The offense of sending through the mails information as to where articles to prevent conception may be obtained<sup>63</sup> or as to how or where or by whom an abortion may be procured<sup>64</sup> is complete when the matter containing the information is deposited for mailing. In order to constitute the offense of sending through the mails information as to the place where an article to produce an abortion may be obtained, it is not necessary that the article should, in fact, be at the place designated.<sup>65</sup> If a person uses the mails to give information that he elects, intends, or is willing to perform an illegal abortion he is guilty, although he does not expressly or impliedly bind himself to operate;<sup>66</sup> but, while no obligation, promise, or assurance is essential, there must be the indication of a positive intent that the act will be done and not merely that it may perhaps be performed.<sup>67</sup> Where one mails matter within the prohibition of the statute, it is not material whether the inducement to do so was sent to him by mail or otherwise.<sup>68</sup>

Knowledge and intent. In order to render a person liable for mailing information as to where articles to prevent conception might be obtained, it is necessary that he have an intent that the articles to which the information pertained should be used for the condemned purposes.<sup>69</sup> Actual knowledge that the articles were nonmailable is unnecessary where the articles were designed, adapted, and intended for the prevention of conception.<sup>70</sup> An intent to violate the statute need not be apparent from the matter mailed,<sup>71</sup> and a letter, although innocent on its face, may convey the prohibited information.<sup>72</sup>

Description of articles. It is not necessary that the matter mailed, giving information as to where or from whom articles for the prevention of conception or the production of abortion may be obtained, should indicate any particular article or thing or its properties.<sup>73</sup> It will be sufficient that accused states in the matter mailed that the remedies can be furnished by him and where and under what circumstances they can be obtained.<sup>74</sup>

Efficacy of article or possibility of legitimate use. It is not a defense to a prosecution for sending matter through the mail giving information as to where articles to prevent conception may be procured that the article would not be effective for that purpose<sup>75</sup> or that the article may have a legitimate use.<sup>76</sup>

Decoy letters. It is not an objection to a conviction for sending through the mail matter containing information as to preventing conception or procuring abortion that the matter was sent in response to a decoy letter written by a government officer or agent,<sup>77</sup> or even by a private citizen desirous of enforcing the law;<sup>78</sup> that the letter was never delivered to the sender or any other person;<sup>79</sup> or that, by reason of the fact that the information was sent in response to a decoy letter signed by a fictitious name, it could never have reached the person addressed.<sup>80</sup> Where the decoy letter is sent

What constitutes notice

A written slip of paper without address or signature, giving information as to how an article designed to prevent conception may be obtained, is a notice within the meaning of the statute, although not volunteered, but sent in reply to a letter asking for the information.—U. S. v. Foote, C.C.N.Y., 25 F.Cas.No. 15,128, 13 Blatchf. 418.

Information given indirectly

If an advertisement gives the forbidden information indirectly it is as much within the prohibition of the law as though it were given in direct terms.—U. S. v. Kelly, C.C.Nev., 26 F.Cas.No.15,514, 3 Sawy. 556.

§ 44. — Indictment

- a. Prevention of conception
- b. Obtaining articles for procuring abortion
- c. Where or by whom abortion may be had

a. Prevention of Conception

An indictment for mailing a letter containing information as to the procurement of an article intended to prevent conception must be certain and specific, and it must state the nature of the article.

In accordance with well-settled rules governing indictments generally, an indictment for mailing a letter containing information where, or from whom, an article intended to prevent conception may be obtained must contain averments of the facts which constitute the offense intended to be charged so certain and specific that accused not only may know the particular charge against him,<sup>82</sup> but may be able to prove a judgment of conviction or acquittal in bar of a second prosecution arising out of the same facts;<sup>83</sup> and if the indictment satisfies this requirement it is sufficient.<sup>84</sup> The indictment must state what the article consisted of,<sup>85</sup> but if several articles are mentioned in the indictment it need not specify or allege which of them is relied on for conviction.<sup>86</sup> It is sufficient to allege that accused knew that the letter mailed gave the prohibited information,<sup>87</sup> and it is not necessary to allege that accused knew that the articles described therein were nonmailable where the indictment shows that they were designed and adapted and intended for preventing conception.<sup>88</sup> Since it is the mailing of the letter which is denounced by the statute, and not the writing of it or causing it to be written, it is unnecessary to allege that defendant wrote the letter or caused it to be written,<sup>89</sup> nor it is necessary to allege that the letter containing the information was ever delivered to any person;<sup>90</sup> it will be sufficient for the indictment to show that it was deposited in the post office and was thus mailed for delivery, since the deposit for mailing constitutes the offense.<sup>91</sup>

An indictment for mailing a letter giving information as to the obtaining of an article for the procuring of an abortion must in some way identify the letter, and for that purpose the letter should be set out in the indictment or a sufficient reason given for not doing so.

An indictment for mailing a letter giving information where, how, and from whom might be obtained an article for the procuring of abortion must in some way identify the letter to the end that accused may be informed of the nature of the charge<sup>92</sup> and that a judgment may be pleaded in bar to a second prosecution for the same offense,<sup>93</sup> and for that purpose the letter should be set out in the indictment<sup>94</sup> or a sufficient reason given for not doing so;<sup>95</sup> but it is not necessary that the letter set out be such that a stranger would know it gave the information<sup>96</sup> or that the indictment should contain explanatory matter to show that it gave the information.<sup>97</sup>

Variance. Rules relating to variance between allegations and proof in criminal prosecutions generally, as considered in Indictments and Informations §§ 254-270, apply in prosecutions for the offense under consideration.<sup>98</sup>

c. Where or by Whom Abortion May Be Had

An indictment for giving information through the mails as to where or by whom an abortion may be had must contain allegations sufficient to sustain the charge.

An indictment for giving information through the mails as to where or by whom any act or operation for procuring or producing abortion will be done or performed must contain allegations sufficient to sustain the charge,<sup>99</sup> and, where the words, in a letter mailed do not apparently convey the prohibited information, it must charge that they were intended to give such information.<sup>1</sup> An indictment for this offense is fatally defective in charging that accused by his letter intended to give information only as to where or by whom an abortion "might" be produced, not as to where or by whom it "would" be produced,<sup>2</sup> and in failing to allege facts that would support a construction of the letter as conveying and intending to convey information that the act would be performed.<sup>3</sup> An indictment which charges that accused knowingly deposited in the post office a letter, giving information as to where an abortion could be performed, sufficiently charges that accused knew of the contents of the letter.<sup>4</sup>

§ 45. — Evidence and Trial

General rules of evidence and trial apply in prosecutions for mailing information pertaining to the prevention of conception or the procurement of abortion.

General rules of evidence<sup>5</sup> and trial<sup>6</sup> apply in prosecutions for mailing information pertaining to the prevention of conception or the procurement of abortion.

§ 46. Articles Designed to Procure Abortion or Prevent Conception

In order to constitute a violation of the statute making it an offense to mail articles designed for procuring abortion or preventing conception, it is sufficient that the article was put up in a form and described in a manner intended to insure its unlawful use by anyone desiring to accomplish that result, and into whose hands it might fall.

In order to constitute a violation of the statute making it an offense to mail articles designed for preventing conception or producing abortion, 18 U. S.C.A. § 1461, it is sufficient that the article, when deposited, was put up in a form, and described in a manner, calculated to insure its use to prevent conception or procure abortion, by anyone desiring to accomplish that result, and into whose hands it might fall.<sup>7</sup> Accused cannot show, in defense, that the article deposited in the mail would not in fact have any tendency to prevent conception or procure abortion, and that its harmless character was known to him when he deposited it.<sup>8</sup> The offense is complete when such objectionable article is knowingly deposited in the mail.<sup>9</sup>

§ 47. Indecent, Libelous, Defamatory, or Threatening Matter on Envelopes, Wrappers, or Postal Cards

In accordance with statutory provisions, it is a criminal offense for any person knowingly to deposit in the mail matter upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, or obscene character, or of a libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character, is written or printed.

In accordance with statutory provisions, 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 1463, 1718, it is a criminal offense for any person knowingly to deposit in the mail matter upon the envelope or outside cover or wrapper of which, or any postal card upon which, any delineations, epithets, terms, or language of an indecent, lewd, lascivious, or obscene character,<sup>10</sup> or of a libelous, scurrilous, defamatory, or threatening character,<sup>11</sup> or calculated by the terms or manner or style of display and obviously intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another,<sup>12</sup> is written or printed, or otherwise impressed or apparent. Within the meaning of the statute, "delineation" signifies representations expressed otherwise than by language.<sup>13</sup> The offense defined by these provisions is distinct and separate from the

Intent

Evidence showing absence of intent that article or thing described in circular deposited in mails should be used for unlawful purposes to prevent conception is material since intent is an essential element of the offense, and exclusion thereof is error.—Davis v. U. S., C.C.A.Ohio, 62 F.2d 473.

6. Question for jury

In prosecution for mailing letter concerning procurement of abortion, evidence whether there was unlawful entrapment of defendant who sent letter in answer to decoy letter sent out by post office inspector was for jury.—Weathers v. U. S., C.C.A.Wis., 126 F.2d 118, certiorari denied 62 S.Ct. 1267, 316 U.S. 681, 86 L. Ed. 1754.

"Display" applicable to delineations

The term "display," as used in the statute prohibiting the mailing of any matter in envelopes with a style of display intended to reflect on the character or conduct of another, is as applicable to delineations as it is to writing or printing.—U. S. v. Dodge, supra.

offense of mailing obscene, lewd, or lascivious matter.<sup>14</sup>

The statute is intended to operate as a protection against delineations or words which will convey or imply insult, threat, or harm to the person addressed, operating either directly in injuring his feelings, or indirectly by attracting the notice of other persons, and raising injurious inferences,<sup>15</sup> and also to protect the government from being made a tool or assistant in the exposure of the matter therein described.<sup>16</sup> The protection concerning the mail service contained in this statute is clearly within the purview of congress<sup>17</sup> and is not objectionable as denying or abridging freedom of speech, as considered in Constitutional Law § 213 a. The statute, being of a penal character, should be strictly construed,<sup>18</sup> and there can be no extension of the statute by construction beyond its terms.<sup>19</sup> Both the purpose and the terms of the act fairly construed must appear to have been violated in order to sustain a charge.<sup>20</sup>

In order to render matter nonmailable as being of libelous, scurrilous, defamatory,<sup>21</sup> or threatening<sup>22</sup> character, or as being calculated and obviously intended to reflect injuriously on the character or conduct of another,<sup>23</sup> this fact must be apparent from an inspection of the envelope, cover, wrapper, or postal card on which it is written. The design and intent must appear from that, and not from extrinsic facts averred or shown.<sup>24</sup> According to some decisions the statute cannot be extended by construction to cases where there is no outside wrapper or cover at all, even though such cases may be within the reason and policy of the statute,<sup>25</sup> and it has accordingly been held that a newspaper<sup>26</sup> or circular<sup>27</sup> without a wrapper, the address being written on the paper or circular itself, of a scurrilous and defamatory nature, and so folded as to expose it to view, is not nonmailable matter within the statute; but there is also authority directly to the contrary.<sup>28</sup> It has also been held that a string or cord wrapped around papers or other mailable matter with a tag attached thereto for the purpose of writing the address is an outside wrapper within the meaning of the statute,<sup>29</sup> and that the writing of any of the matter prohibited by the statute on such tag is written upon an outside wrapper and subjects the writer to the penalty provided by the statute.<sup>30</sup>

The other elements of the offense being present, the contents of the envelope or wrapper, upon which the prohibited matter appears, are immaterial.<sup>31</sup> Inasmuch as a prosecution under the statute does not proceed as one for libel, it is immaterial whether the objectionable language be true or false,<sup>32</sup> and it is also immaterial whether accused was actuated by public spirit or private malice.<sup>33</sup>

In a prosecution for violation of the statute, the court must first determine as a matter of law whether the writing in question is within the prohibition of the statute<sup>34</sup> and should consider whether there is any privilege attaching to the writing in question.<sup>35</sup>

Political propaganda

Where postal cards, mailed as political propaganda to defeat candidate's election, did not per se offend statute, charge that cards were libelous, where it was not contended that charges were false, must be considered in light of rule that publication of truthful information regarding candidates for public office is for interest of public, and therefore privileged.—McKnight v. U. S., supra.

§ 48. — Mail Matter from Creditors and Collection Agencies

The statute prohibiting the mailing of libelous, defamatory, or threatening matter on wrappers or envelopes covers mail matter from creditors and collection agencies addressed to debtors and bearing externally visible charges or imputations of habitual refusal to pay debts, threats of suits, etc.

The statute prohibiting the mailing of libelous, defamatory, or threatening matter on wrappers or envelopes, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1718, covers mail matter from creditors and collection agencies addressed to debtors and bearing externally visible charges or imputations of habitual refusal to pay debts, threats of suits, etc.,<sup>36</sup> not alone because it is of a threatening character, but because it is calculated and obviously intended to reflect injuriously on the character and conduct of others,<sup>37</sup> whether upon a letter<sup>38</sup> or a postal card.<sup>39</sup>

§ 49. Matter in Furtherance of Scheme or Artifice to Defraud, Etc.

- a. In general
- b. Gist of offense
- c. Elements of offense
- d. Persons liable
- e. Defenses

a. In General

The statute making it an offense to use the mail in furtherance of schemes or artifices to defraud is a valid exercise of the constitutional power of congress and should be construed broadly to carry out its purpose.

A violation of the statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 1341, making it an offense to use the mail in furtherance of schemes or artifices to defraud is an offense against the United States.<sup>40</sup> The statute is a valid exercise of the constitutional power of congress,<sup>41</sup> and is not in contravention of any provision of the federal Constitution.<sup>42</sup> Congress may make the use of the mails in furtherance of the scheme denounced by the statute a criminal offense, although it is without power to forbid the scheme itself,<sup>43</sup> and it may make each putting of a letter in a post office a separate offense without rendering the statute objectionable on the ground that it infringes the constitutional prohibition of inflicting cruel and unusual punishment.<sup>44</sup>

The purpose of the statute is to prevent the use of the mails in aid of schemes and artifices to defraud others of their money and property,<sup>45</sup> and the statute must be construed broadly to carry out its purpose.<sup>46</sup> It has not been repealed by the provisions of the Securities Act, 15 U.S.C.A. § 77 q, which prohibit the fraudulent sale of securities by mail.<sup>47</sup>

b. Gist of Offense

The gist of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is not the scheme to defraud but the use, or attempted use, of the mails in execution of the scheme.

The gist of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is not the scheme to defraud,<sup>48</sup> or the devising thereof,<sup>49</sup> or the fraudulent design which is

- (d) Lawfulness or unlawfulness of scheme
- (e) Success of scheme or efficacy to defraud
- (f) Benefit accruing to accused

(a) In General

The first element of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is a scheme devised, or intended to be devised, to defraud or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses. The statute includes any scheme or artifice to defraud or to obtain money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses.

The first element of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is a scheme devised, or intended to be devised, to defraud or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses.<sup>56</sup> The statute includes any scheme or artifice of whatsoever nature, the purpose of which is to defraud or to obtain money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses,<sup>57</sup> provided the scheme is intended to be carried into effect,<sup>58</sup> and it is not limited to the particular frauds enumerated therein.<sup>59</sup> The word "devise," as used in the statute, it is said conveys the idea of being devious, contriving, disingenuous; a scheme or plan whose appearance differs from the reality; an artifice, trick, false pretense, or token.<sup>60</sup>

A scheme or artifice to defraud within the statute consists in forming some plan or devising some trick to perpetrate a fraud on another.<sup>61</sup> The scheme to defraud condemned is not confined to devices by which it is intended that the customer shall receive nothing for his money,<sup>62</sup> but the statutory scheme may be found in any plan to get money or property of others by deceiving them as to the substantial identity of the thing which they are to receive in exchange.<sup>63</sup> So, a scheme whereby customers are to be induced to part with their money by leading them to believe they are receiving something different from, superior to, and worth more than what is actually being sold, is within the statute,<sup>64</sup> although the thing to be sold will approximate in commercial value the price to be asked and received.<sup>65</sup>

A single scheme to defraud may involve a multiplicity of ways and means of action and procedure,<sup>66</sup> and it may be such that the complete execution of it would involve the commission of more than one criminal offense.<sup>67</sup> In order to bring a scheme within the statute, it must be fraudulent in its inception,<sup>68</sup> but a scheme is not incomplete because ways and means for carrying it into effect are subsequently to be devised.<sup>69</sup> In order to sustain a conviction, there need not be a scheme definitely devised in the first instance with respect to the particular instruments of fraud<sup>70</sup> or the particular proposed victims;<sup>71</sup> it is sufficient if, after the devising of a scheme of general features, it is shown that, in the execution thereof, particular instruments and particular victims were developed and the use attempted to be made of them.<sup>72</sup> It is not necessary that the scheme should be fraudulent on its face.<sup>73</sup> Where a person who devised a scheme to defraud by use of the mails prior to the enactment of the statute continued his scheme thereafter, his continuance constitutes a devising of a scheme after the taking effect of the statute.<sup>74</sup>

As a general rule, the elements of fraud developed in civil cases are applicable to prosecutions under the statute.<sup>75</sup> It is not necessary that the scheme in furtherance of which the mails are used should constitute a fraud either at common law or by statute,<sup>76</sup> or give rise to a civil action

Prosecution for false pretenses

The mail-fraud statute is broad in scope and not limited by the common-law rules applicable to a prosecution for false pretenses—Deaver v. U. S., 155 F.2d 740, 81 U.S.App.D.

for deceit.<sup>77</sup> The scheme must embrace active or actual fraud, and mere constructive fraud is insufficient.<sup>78</sup>

Extortion by force or threats. A scheme to extort money by force or threats is not within the mail-fraud statute.<sup>79</sup>

(b) Intent to Defraud

An intent to defraud must exist at the time the mails are used in furtherance of the scheme.

In order to bring a case within the operation of the statute, an intent to defraud must exist.<sup>80</sup> There can be an intent to defraud, even though the scheme is not successful,<sup>81</sup> and even though the person against whom it is directed may know that the facts represented to him are not as they actually exist.<sup>82</sup> The intent must exist at the time the mails are used in furtherance of the scheme to defraud.<sup>83</sup> An intent to defraud cannot be found in any mere expression of honest opinion as to quality<sup>84</sup> or as to future performance,<sup>85</sup> or a mere puffing or exaggeration in respect of articles possessing substantial merit if within proper or reasonable bounds.<sup>86</sup> When a proposed seller sends advertisements through the mail assigning to an article offered for sale qualities which it does not possess and falsely asserting the existence of certain advantages, he exceeds the limits of "puffing" and engages in false representations and pretenses and is guilty of a violation of the statute.<sup>87</sup>

(c) Representations Used

The mail-fraud statute includes representations of law or fact, expressed or implied, or representations as to the past, present, or future. Knowledge of the accused as to the truth or falsity of representations made by him is an essential element of the offense.

In order to constitute a violation of the mail-fraud statute, it is not necessary that there should be actual misrepresentations as to an existing fact.<sup>88</sup> The statute includes everything designed to defraud by misrepresentations as to the past and present,<sup>89</sup> or by promises as to the future.<sup>90</sup> A

Sale of stock in legitimate mining operation

Where the dominant purpose and object of an enterprise are to engage in legitimate mining operations, and the sale of mining stock, through use of the mails is purely subordinate to that end, such purposes lend themselves to legitimacy and tend to deny criminal intent to defraud in selling the stock.—Estep v. U. S., C.C.A.Utah, 140 F.2d 40.

Value of stock

Representations as to value, soundness, and worth of securities may go so far beyond what may be considered the proper limits of exaggerating enthusiasm of normal salesman, or the mistaken judgment of the honest man, as to impress them with badge of "fraud" as basis of prosecution for using the mails to defraud.—Holmes v. U. S., C.C.A. Neb., 134 F.2d 125.

88. U.S.—Fournier v. U. S., C.C.A. Ill., 58 F.2d 3, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 647, 286 U.S. 565, 76 L.Ed. 1297—U. S. v. McKay, D.C.Mich., 45 F.Supp. 1007.

fraud or deception which would justify a conviction for using the mails to defraud may be either by express words or by implication reasonably derived therefrom by the reader.<sup>91</sup> Misrepresentations of law as well as of fact may bring the case within the statute, since deception may be practiced on the unsophisticated and unlearned, even though the representations made were those of law.<sup>92</sup>

Knowledge of falsity. Knowledge of accused as to the truth or falsity of representations made by him is an essential element of the offense,<sup>93</sup> and such knowledge must exist at the time the mails were used for the purpose of executing the scheme.<sup>94</sup> If accused believed in the truth of the representations made by him, it matters not how visionary or illusory the scheme may be, there is no violation of the statute.<sup>95</sup> On the other hand, the statute is violated if the party making the representations had no belief that they were true,<sup>96</sup> or if the representations were made with a reckless disregard as to whether they were true or false,<sup>97</sup> it being the duty of the party sending out representations through the mail to make such investigation as is necessary to enable him honestly to sign and send them out.<sup>98</sup> He must exercise such discretion in ascertaining the facts as would be expected of a reasonably prudent person.<sup>99</sup> Representations, in order to be justified, cannot fairly exceed what was believed to be actually true.<sup>1</sup>

(d) Lawfulness or Unlawfulness of Scheme

In order that there may be a violation of the mail-fraud statute, it is not necessary that all or even the main part of the business or scheme should be of a fraudulent character.

In order that there may be a violation of the mail-fraud statute, it is not necessary that all or even the main part of the business or scheme should be of a fraudulent character.<sup>2</sup> If fraudulent in important and continuing branches of its activities, the enterprise as a whole may properly be characterized as a fraudulent scheme.<sup>3</sup> The statute includes schemes to defraud by means of false pretenses, although used in the prosecution of an established business legitimate if honestly conducted.<sup>4</sup> The intent to use lawfully the money obtained by a fraudulent scheme does not render the scheme less fraudulent.<sup>5</sup>

(e) Success of Scheme or Efficacy to Defraud

In order to authorize a conviction under the mail-fraud statute, it is not essential that the fraudulent scheme should have met with success.

Concealment of insolvency

Where mortgage and loan business became insolvent, the continuance of the business, payment of interest, sending out of statements as before, with concealment of the known insolvency, as respects mail fraud, constituted a false pretense that the firm's affairs were as they had been in the past.—Zimmerman v. U. S., C. A.Tex., 171 F.2d 790.

Offering for sale

Loan company offering notes and live-stock mortgages for sale to banks impliedly represented bona fides of transactions.—Butler v. U. S., C.C.A.Utah, 53 F.2d 800.

49 C.J. p 1205 note 95.

Repetition after true statement becomes false

The continuous repetition of what was once a true statement but had become false and was known to be false at the time of the repetition is enough to constitute a "scheme to defraud" within terms of statute.—U. S. v. Dilliard, C.C.A.N.Y., 101 F.2d 829, certiorari denied Dilliard v. U. S., 59 S.Ct. 484, 306 U.S. 635, 83 L.Ed. 1036, Koven v. U. S., 59 S.Ct. 484, 306 U.S. 635, 83 L.Ed. 1036, and Donegan v. U. S., 59 S.Ct. 484, 306 U.S. 635, 83 L.Ed. 1036.

97. U.S.—West v. U. S., C.C.A.Colo., 68 F.2d 96.
49 C.J. p 1405 note 96.

Self-delusion will not justify an otherwise baseless representation to others.—Estep v. U. S., C.C.A.Utah, 140 F.2d 40—Hawley v. U. S., C.C.A. Colo., 133 F.2d 966.

49 C.J. p 1206 note 23.

Lawfulness in form and appearance
Even though business is lawful in form and appearance, an enterprise cannot be furthered by sending fraudulent representations through the mails.—Securities and Exchange Commission v. Timetrust, Inc., D.C. Cal., 28 F.Supp. 34.

3. U.S.—Stephens v. U. S., C.C.A. Cal., 41 F.2d 440, certiorari denied Spicer v. U. S., 51 S.Ct. 83, 282 U.S. 880, 75 L.Ed. 777.

In order to authorize a conviction under the mail-fraud statute, it is not essential that the fraudulent scheme should have met with success,<sup>6</sup> or that anyone should have been actually defrauded;<sup>7</sup> the crime is complete before the letter designed to mislead or otherwise used in carrying out the scheme to defraud is received by the intended victim.<sup>8</sup> The damage resulting from the fraudulent scheme is not an essential ingredient of the offense,<sup>9</sup> and the damage calculated to result may be large or small.<sup>10</sup> The scheme is not required to be reasonable<sup>11</sup> or practical,<sup>12</sup> and it is not even necessary to a conviction that the matter mailed should be of a nature calculated to be effective in carrying out the fraudulent scheme.<sup>13</sup> It is enough if, having devised the scheme to defraud, defendant, with a view of executing it, deposits in the post office letters which he thinks may assist in carrying it into effect, although they may be absolutely ineffective therefor.<sup>14</sup>

(f) Benefit Accruing to Accused

It is not an element of the offense that the accused obtained any benefit by the execution of the scheme.

It is not an element of the offense that accused obtained any benefit by the execution of the scheme,<sup>15</sup> or that he intended<sup>16</sup> or expected<sup>17</sup> to realize any benefit to himself from the execution of the scheme, or to convert the money obtained thereby to his own use.<sup>18</sup>

(3) Use of Mails

- (a) In general
- (b) Time and number of mailings
- (c) Person to whom mail directed
- (d) Mailing by agents or employees
- (e) Nature and contents of matter mailed

(a) In General

The second element of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is a use of the mails for the purpose of executing the scheme or artifice to defraud or attempting to do so.

The second element of the offense under the mail-fraud statute is a use of the mails for the purpose of executing the scheme or artifice to defraud or attempting to do so.<sup>19</sup> The mails must be used with the intent of assisting in the execution of the scheme or artifice.<sup>20</sup>

An intent to use the mails to effect a scheme to defraud need not be embraced in the scheme in order to constitute the offense of using the mails to defraud,<sup>21</sup> and, in order to sustain a conviction under the statute, it is sufficient if, a scheme to defraud having been devised by accused, the mails were actually used in effecting or attempting to effect the scheme.<sup>22</sup> When a person does an act with knowledge that use of the mails will follow in the usual course of business, or where such use may reasonably be foreseen, although not actually intended, he has caused the mails to be used,<sup>23</sup> al-

Use of mails as gist of offense see supra subdivision b of this section.

Basis for jurisdiction

It is the use of the mails for the purpose of executing the scheme which gives federal courts jurisdiction over the offense.—Mitchell v. U. S., C.C.A.N.M., 142 F.2d 480, certiorari denied 65 S.Ct. 49, 323 U.S. 747, 89 L.Ed. 598—Rosenberg v. U. S., C.C.A.N.M., 120 F.2d 935.

Alternative means of using mail
